Sexual assault, STDs focus of health week

UK's Sexual Health and Safety Week begins today with a series of presentations aimed at increasing awareness about sexual behavior and curbing the spread of sexually transmitted diseases.

"This week encompasses all sorts of topics," said Lisa Stofer, assistant dean of students and UK's health education coordinator.

"We'll talk about sexual assault, AIDS and other STDs, the way men and women treat each other — all different kinds of sexual health is-sues that, I think, are primary prob-

"What we find is that some col-lege students don't know a lot of the basic information about con-doms and how to have safe sex, and a lot of people adhere to a lot of myths about rape," Stofer said.

SGA began this year with a 57,000 debt left to SGA President Scott Croshie by former SGA president Scant Croshie by former SGA president Scant Loman.
The debt is the reason SGA is short on money this year, said SGA Comproller Pete November. And bills are still coming in, which means the final total of the debt is unknown.

The debt "is not usual ... it's very unusual," November said.
Crosbie and November said in past years new administrations have benefited from a carry-over from the previous one. Instead, Crosbie found that SGA incurred a debt, for which his administration will have to pay.

A major feature of the indoor facility would be the football field. The field tiself would be stunning to a prospective student-athlete. It would be a major recruiting advantage for the University of Kentucky:
"The indoor facility is badly needed," said Tom Simpson, the men's golf coach. Baseball coach Keith Madson said the facility will "be a tremendous boost to our offseason efforts to get the baseball team in the right kind of condition to open up the season."

The facility will include a football field, running track, batting and golf nets, a gymnastics room, and an equipment room. Newton hopes the facility will be made available for students and fa-See CENTER, Back page

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Kentucky

State University governing board's canceling the inauguration of President John Wolfe Jr. and recent criticism of him threaten the future of the four-year university, civil rights leaders said this weekend.

"The viability of KSU is at stake," said Frank Simpson of Louisville, former national president of KSU alumin. 'I'm fearful that all this controversy will hur student enrollment and morale of the school's faculty, both black and white."

The Rev. Louis Coleman of Shel The Rev. Louis Coleman of Shel-byville, who is a part-time KSU employee, said, "We feel there's a larger issue than Wolfe, possibly of trying to do away with the status that Kentucky State University now has. The board seems to be going along with that agenda." Simpson and 14 other civil rights leaders met Saturday at First Con-gregational Methodist Church in Louisville to discuss plans to help Wolfe and the beleaguered universi-ty.

The Courier-Journal reported Saturday that the regents asked Wolfe to resign and that Wolfe wanted to consult an attorney before responding.

consult an attorney before responding.

Nunn would neither confirm not deny that the board has asked Wolfe to resign, and Wolfe could not be reached for comment.

The inauguration was canceled, Nunn said, because of a personnel committee report, recent revelations about spending on Wolfe's official residence and Wolfe's decision to give himself a nearly 10 percent raise in apparent violation of his

The board also has twice refused oratify Wolfe's roster of administrative officers.

Marvin Williams, president of Student Fellowship for Blacks in Louisville, accused Nunn of trying to oust Wolfe in an attempt to weaken the university. "I think Louie Nunn's under-handed approach of trying to get rid of Dr. Wolfe is an expression of his desire to make KSU less than what it is," Williams said.

"That is totally inconsiderate of the student body."

Blacks in Kentucky want to make sure that KSU remains a four-year institution, Williams said, and to "have a strong black president like Dr. Wolfe."

"The board of regents is not al-lowing Wolfe to carry out his re-sponsibilities," said Shelby Lanier, president of the Louisville branch of the NAACP. "They don't seem to want KSU to remain viable as is, possibly suggesting that it become a junior college."

Jazz innovator Miles Davis, 65, dies

By ROBERT JABLON

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — Miles Davis, one of America's fin-est jazz trumpeters and the most consistent trendsetter in jazz histo-ry, died Saturday. He was 65.

ry, died Saturday. He was 65.
Davis died of pneumonia, respiratory failure and stroke, Dr. Jeff Harris said in a statement read by Pat Kirk of St. John's Hospital and Health Center, where Davis was admitted earlier this month.
Davis was the most famous trumpeter in his generation, in the line of jazz trumpeters that stretched from Louis Armstrong to Dizzy Gillespie to Wynton Marsalis.
He was the innovator of more

He was the innovator of more distinct styles than any other jazz musician. He pioneered in cool jazz, hard bop, modal playing, free-form explorations and use of elec-Tronics.

He was an astounding spotter and developer of talent, providing the springboard that brought many players to prominence. Tony Williams was just 18 when Davis hired him in 1963; Herbie Hancock was 32 when he isinged the same year.

nams was just to when Davis nired with in 1963; Herbie Hancock was 23 when he joined the same year. Jazz historian Dan Morgenstern once described Davis as "a generous, kind man whose true self is not revealed by his flamboyant, provocative behavior, but rather by the introspective, complex, often shifting style of his music."

Davis had the respect and admiration of musicians but every time he changed direction his audience divided between loyal and disendanted listeners. He ignored them. In his 1989 autobiography, Miles, the wrote: "To be and stay a great musician you've got to always be open to what's new, what 's happening at the moment. You have to be able to absorb it if you're going to

"I want to keep creating, chang-ing. Music isn't about standing still and becoming safe. I like playing with young musicians.

with young musicians.
"That was my gift, having the ability to put certain guys together that would create a chemistry and then letting them go; letting them play what they knew, and above it."

Davis was a fascinating figure because of his enigmatic personality, seemingly remote and arrogant; its thin body and striking face; his angry statements about white people though he often hired white musicians; his whispery, raspy voice — which came after he yelled at somebody following 1956 surgery to crewove polyps on his vocal cords.

to remove polyps on his vocal cords.

Davis was plagued by illness much of his life, at various times battling diabetes, pneumonia, a stroke, and hip joint problems caused by sickle cell amenia. He broke both legs in an auto accident in 1972. He wrote in his autobiography that he overcame heroin addiction in the early '50s but continued to use cocaine until 1981.

Miles Dewey Davis III was born in Alton, Ill., on May 25, 1926, son of a dentist. When he was 2, the family moved to nearby East St. Louis, Ill., where he grew up.

He got his first trumpet from a family friend as a child and was playing professionally at age 15. His parents wouldn't let him go on the road until he finished high school.

Davis moved to New York in school.

Davis moved to New York in 1944, at 18, to locate Dizzy Gillespie, one of his early trumpet heroes, and saxophonist Charlie Parker. When Gillespie left Parker's combo, Davis replaced him. He also attended the Juilliard School for a months with the young bebop revolutionaries in Billy Eckstine's band.

In 1947, he began a long and successful relationship with Gil Evans, an arranger who knew how to provide a framework for Davis' distinctive sound.

In 1948 he left Parker and, looking for a lighter, subtler, tuneful sound in jazz, he established a ninepiece band, with Evans arrangements, including Gerry Mulligan, Lee Konitz, John Lewis and Max Roach. They recorded The Birth of the Cool.

That influential album ushered in cool jazz and set the stage for the chamber jazz that followed. It included Davis' best composition by that time, "Boplicity."

Two of his later compositions became jazz standards, "All Blues"
and "So What."

He was a parent of cool jazz, but

and "So What."

He was a parent of cool jazz, but when it became popular, Davis turned his back on it and surrounded himself with bebop players. He became the founder of hard bop.

In the 1950s he played spare jazz with all irrelevance purged. And he made records, with Evans arranging, with lush orchestral settings, some of the earliest successful or-chestral jazz.

In 1955 he performed at the New-port Jazz Festival. His sensational improvisations, lyrical and tonally pure, creating excitement without screaming, made him the hit of the festival.

He was then able to create a quin He was then able to create a quin-tet — it set the pattern for jazz com-bos of the 1950s — with drummer Philly Joe Jones, bassist Paul Cham-bers, pianist Red Garland and saxo-phonist John Coltrane. Saxophonist Cannonball Adderley later made it a from each other.

In 1963, he brought in Williams on drums, Hancock on piano, Ron Carter on bass, and later added sarphonist Wayne Shorter. This combo, recording on electric instruments, became as influential as the 1955 quintet. Their Bitches Brew, the album that sparked the jazzrock or fusion of the 1970s, became Davis' best-selling album and brought jazz record sales out of the doldrums.

His trumpet played melodic im-provisations or fragment bursts over electronic instruments and rock-influenced rhythm. This creat-

Davis' strength in early and mid-Davis' strength in early and mid-dle years came from a singing tone — soft, rich, intimate, best in the middle register, his ability to put in-tensity and tension in the music and original rhythmic and melodic ide-as. Later, he increasingly played in the upper register.

After 1968, the personnel in Davis' groups became less stable, due to his temperament and periods of inactivity. He didn't play at all between 1975 and 1980. He brought in some fine experimentalists, Chick Corea, Joe Zawinul, Dave Holland, John McLaughlin, Keith Jarrett, Airto Moreira, Billy Cobhama and Jack De Johnette, many of whom later became influential.

Cats strike early in 24-6 victory over Kent

Forget the Canadian Football League or arena football.

American collegiate football was meant to be played on a 100-yard field, a concept the Kent Golden Flashes have yet to master.

That was the scenario Saturday night at Commonwealth Stadium as a crowd of 56,150 watched the Flashes equal UK in almost every offensive category, dominate time of possession and move the ball at will between the 20-yard lines.

But time and time again, the gen-will between the 20-yard lines. But time and time again, the generous UK defense turned stingy as the Flashes moved into scoring position, holding Kent to only six points. Meanwhile, the UK offense scored early and came up with enough big plays to enable the Cats (2-1) to come away with a 24-6 victory over the winless Golden Flashes (0-4).

the field," Kent coach Pete Cordelli said. "But every time we got inside the 20, we just couldn't get inside the end zone. This has to be a complete and total game, and we just didn't quite get it there tonight."
UK coach Bill Curry had mixed emotions about his defense's performance.

"I am ot pleased with the way "I am ot pleased with the way kent was able to move the ball against us," Curry said. "But we got very tough when the field shortened. Every time they got close, we were able to shut the door. And that's a mark of a good defense. "I didn't see any lack of effort from our people. But there was a lack of concentration. We've got to have concentration all over the field."

separate occasions, Kent could manage only one score.

The Flashes' inability to put points on the scoreboard reached its peak in the fourth quarter. Down only 18 points with 11:39 remaining, Kent used 20 plays and more than seven minutes on a drive that resulted in no points. UK took over on downs with 4:31 left, and the game was all but over.

"I thought the defense played pretty good tonight," said UK line-backer Marry Moore, who led the Cats with 17 tackles. "We had our good and bad points, but we held them scoreless in the second half and won the game."

Freshman tailback Damon Hood was showcased on UK's first drive, carrying the ball four times for 40 yards. Consecutive runs of 19 and 12 yards by Hood moved the ball to the Kent 1-yard line. From there, Cniig Walker took over, waltzing into the end zone behind the blocks of tackle Chuck Bradley and full-back Terry Samuels. Doug Pelfrey added the extra point to give the Cats a 7-0 lead at the 10:32 mark in the first quarter.

The Cats struck quickly on their second series. After four short gains, quarterback Brad Smith completed a pass in the flat to split end Neal Clark. "I was really nervous getting in there for the first time," said Jones, who also completed his first pass, an 11-yarder to Troy Hobbs to set up the score. "I've been waiting on the sidelines for a long time, so it was something I had to do given the chance. We were in a real good position to score and I had to execute."

The wide receiver/return specialist wears only a size 8 cleat, but no-body's feet on the UK football team are quite as big. Those feet loomed large in the Wildcats' 24-6 victory over Kent Saturday night.

His leaping attempt was somewhat successful, but the punter got a hand up at the last second as "Air Johnson" (Sorry Michael) flew overhead to trip him up. Barely, "All I do is watch for the ball, catch it and then try to make them miss," Johnson said with a voice that matches his body—quiet.

Commonwealth Stadium was anything but quiet during and after his returns Saturday night. He was certainly the brightest star that night.

It had been awhile since he had shone like that. An ankle injury before last season kept him at a less-than-100 percent level for most of his sophomore year. He averaged only 4.4 yards a return in 1990. As a freshman, though, he was amazing. He ranked second in the Southeastern Conference in punt returns (12.1 average) and kickoff returns (25.6). He had coaches choosing to kick the ball out of bounds rather than take a chance with this mite.

Last season, he was like a fox trying to outrun the hounds on three legs. It wasn't too successful. Outside of his feet, there's not much to this little guy.

UK couldn't muster another touchdown in the remaining 33 minutes of the game against a weak Kent team.

And the question shot through many minds: Is Pookie Jones the quarterback UK's present?

Nuclear reduction shows an active George Bush

Nuclear weapons have held the world in fear for the past 40 years, but now that all could be changing. President Bush announced Friday that the United States was unilaterally eliminating all land- and sea-based short-range nuclear weapons in Europe and Asia. He also announced that our fleet of B-32 bombers was being called off 24-hour alert and that he wanted to negotiate with the Soviets to reduce long range ballistic missiles.

This is the largest reduction by any nuclear power ever and reflects the new geopolitical climate that has resulted from the changes in the Soviet Union since the failed hard-line coup in August.

Bush recognizes the declenting nuclear threat that the Soviet Union poses to the world. It is also a recognition of the limitations of the U.S. expense account. The buildup of nuclear weapons in the 1980s was never meant to be a permanent measure and Bush properly has decided that now is the time to realize the fruits of our victory and cut back on these weapons of mass destruction.

The move is also a show of maturity for Bush. This was a major active step, not merely a reactive one. Bush has acted far ahead of public and "expert" opinion. For one of the first times in his presidency, Bush is in the lead on an issue.

One issue of worry is the so-called "peace-dividend." The government must watch what it does with the money it will save as a result of the cut in defense spending. This is not a call for major new domestic spending measures, but rather an opportunity to cut back on the size of the deficit.

Of course the move is more than just a foreign policy decision, it was an election-year political move.

Now Bush can run as the man who made the world safe from nuclear weapons. It is an issue the Democrats will find tough to counter.

While we applaud this ground-breaking move, it is now time Bush turned his eyes more toward Peoria, Ill., than Moscow, Tel Aviv or Baghdad. The primary cause of past Us. foreign involvement has been the struggle against communism and the Soviet Union. During this time, many problems have developed in the United States.

Bush now must address these problems as painful as it may be to Goso. Even though the Democrats may find it hard to counter Bush's foreign policy experience, unless he does much more on the home front he will be very vulnerable on domestic issues.

Hopkins, Jones disregard state constitution

During the 1990 session, the Ken-tucky General Assembly passed a comprehensive education reform package. One of the most important components of the package was the probable unconstitutional stripping of power from the state superinten-dent of education.

dent of education.

Several years ago, a constitutional amendment was placed on the ballot in an effort to make the superintendent post an appointed one. The voters soundly rejected the proposal and decided to continue choosing their own superintendent.

The reformist would not be their own superintendent.

The reformists would not be stopped, though. In the 1990 session they pushed a bill through the legistature stripping the superintendent of all substantive power and giving him a minimal salary. All the position's power was given to the new commissioner for education, a post now held by Thomas Boysen.

The legislature could not eliminate the commissioner of the country of the count commissioner for education, a possen, now held by Thomas Boysen.

The legislature could not eliminate the superintendent's position without a constitutional amendment — an amendment that was soundly rejected by the voters of the state just a few years before. In reality, though, the legislature did away with the position. Certainly, there still is a man called the superintendent, but he can do nothing. By definition, the superintendent must be in charge of the state school system. Since that is no longer the case, the legislature's action was unconstitutional.

This summer the gubernatorial nominees of both parties appeared on the WUKY talk show "Press Conference of the Air." Lt. Gov. Brereton Jones was asked if the action was unconstitutional, and his response was classic political dodge was made by setting up a system that allows us to get a professional leader for education that does not have to run for public office and be part of the political system," Jones

Now, look at what he said. Jones did not say whether the action was unconstitutional. The question is not whether it is a good thing to have a professional educator achief of Kentucky's schools, it is whether they simply can wake up one day and decide to change the workings of the government without any regard to the constitution or to the wishes of the citizenry of the state.

The question put to Republican nominee Rep. Larry Hopkins was similar. Didn't the legislature in a de facto manner amend the Kentucky Constitution?

tucky Constitution?
"They did and I think it was the right thing to do ... and I would suggest that we might look at other ways of implementing that. I would like to do away with the Agriculture Commissioner. ... We'd have to do a constitutional amendment in order to do saw with that position but I. to do away with that position, but I would not be opposed to working that same way through the legislature. Asking them to remove the commissioner, by ballot, and if they don't do it, there are a lot of ways to do it. I happen to approve of what they've done," Hopkins said.

What?!?

I think I would have felt better if he had dodged the question, too. Hopkins admitted that the action was unconstitutional. This is usually a first step in denouncing the action, but not with Hopkins. He seems to think it was a neat idea. Hew if the people won't cooperate. Hey, if the people won't cooperate, then subvert their will. We'll give them their chance to vote right and if they don't "they're are a lot of them their chance to vote right and if they don't "they're are a lot of ways to do it."

To be fair to Hopkins, what little substance there was in Jones' an-swer would tend to show Jones would agree with Hopkins on the idea of subverting the constitution and the voters of Kentucky. Jones just decided to avoid that nasty lit-tle constitutional issue allogether.

This attitude is a very dangerous one for our future governor to have.

The governor swears to uphold the constitution, not to uphold the constitution when he agrees with it and subvert it when he feels it would be constituted.

convenient.

What if it were decided to strip the governor of his powers and hire a state manager? A professional who does not have to worry about running for "public office and be (ing) part of the political system."
Why, then we wouldn't have to worry about those mudslinging governor's races and people like Wallace Wilkinson.

Wallace Wilkinson.

Using the reasoning of the men who would be our governor, the legislature could pass such a law, override any possible veto and make the state manager the true power in the state. Of course, we still would have a man we called governor, Otherwise it may be unconstitutional.

Editorial Editor N. Alan Cornett is a history senior and a Kernel columnist.

Columnist sees bad future for reporters

Merlene Davis, columnist for the Lexington Herald-Leader, met with students in one of the Writing for the Mass Media classes in the School of Journalism at UK, and it was a trip.

Davis held 15 students on the edge of their seats in the Marguerie McLaughlin Room. She was the ringmaster. She chiedd them, challenged them and commiserated with them: She turned them every way but loose. They laughed, they frowned, they puzzled, they struggled, they went away with the certain knowledge that they had been in the presence of some kind of journalist. She admitted she was a loudmouth and a thorn in the side of the Herald-Leader. If her newspaper had a right to open up any member of the public and to expose their insides, she said she had an obligation to do the same thing to the Herald-Leader.

thing to the Herald-Leader.

She talked about how tough it is for newspapers everywhere. The bottom line has just about everybody worried, and the net effect is less room for stories. The writing has to hook readers as never before, because hardly anybody has time to read boring stuff. If the newspaper is not read, and if the advertisers don't buy space, there're no meat and potatoes on the table for writers.

Davis said she doesn't want to Davis said she doesn't want to be an editor or a newspaper man-ager of any kind. She just wants to write her column, and she wants to make it relate to her au-dience. She said, her audience is mainly female, is often trapped at home, and the whole idea of targeting newspapers toward fe-males is the present name of the makes is the present hame of the game. According to research, which she cited, blacks and fe-males in the new century are go-ing to make it tougher and tougher for white males to find jobs in journalism.

"You all are in a lot of trou-ble," she said, as she leaned in toward a young white male with his back to the wall of the room.

his back to the wain or the room.

But Davis said being black or being female would not be enough. It probably would put a foot inside the door, she said, but if talent were not connected with the foot, "You'll be out of there," she said to a black female, who had asked about jobs in the future.

"I think I would have answered, 'What jobs?" I said, and she nodded in agreement.

works?" she nodded again.

What it all seems to suggest is that the future will belong to those students who prepare themselves better than their classmates. There always will be career opportunities, and positions will be tougher to find, because of the competitiveness of the applicants. Maybe it always has been that way, but it seems to be much more so in the last years of the 20th century.

Davis said her mother always told her she'd always have to told her she'd always have to work harder because she was black. In the new century, many folks are going to have to work harder than everybody else because they're white — or male. "You all are really in a lot of trouble." Davis said again to four white males in a row. She said, "you can hate me if you want to, I'm just telling you how it is." She wasn't being mean about it. In fact, she seemed to be very truthful.

An hour and a half of nonstop Merlene Davis in person has a way of making the juices flow. She's a credit to the UK School of Journalism, where she graduated, and she's a credit to the Lexington Herald-Leader, where she works. She receives fan mail — "About 15 letters a week when things are calm, about 50 a week when something is stirred week when something is stirred.

An hour and a half of nonstop week when something is stirred up"—and she says she receives a relatively small amount of hate mail on a regular basis. "They want to shut me up," Davis said, a fact that she accepts as part of the territory. As for me, I hadn't been a regular reader of her column, but after this recent center-ring event, I decided I'm probably missing something valuable.

I know one thing: If anybody wants to know where journalism education is headed, they'll probably want to be wired in to somebody who enjoys telling it

Her name is Merlene Davis, and I'm sure glad I'm not her boss.

Letters

To the editor:
Like any other loyal University of Kentucky student, I pick up my copy of the Kentucky Kernel about every other day. I thumb through the first couple of pages enjoying the diversity of topics on which your paper has decided to dwell. I stop momentarily to glance at the classifieds and a sarcastically humorous Doggy Bag. It is usually at this point that I begin to approach the editorial page and promise myself that if it is there, I will simply refuse to read it. I have become accustomed to the plethora of blind, one-sided views that it represents. The article of which I am speaking is the often ill-fated attempt at a political statement make by the Kernel's own editorial editor, Mr. Alan Cornett. I ty to ignore Cornett's ednel's own editorial editor, Mr. Alan Cornett. I try to ignore Cornett's ed-itorial, but it has a strange, eerie at-raction like that of a Morton Dow-ney. Ir. talk show or the latest edition of "Young Republican Weekly," Why, wasn't it only last week that Cornett was telling us that we shouldn't confuse the radi-cally beneficial changes taking place in the Soviet Union with the Democratic Party here in the United States. The whole article was punctuated with the idea that everything beneficial in the world today, from the failed Soviet coup attempt to the Adlanta Braves winning games in September, is somehow linked to the wonderful Republican Party.

Now, this week Cornett has decided to write about how important the Clarence Thomas nomination is and how those dirty, old Democrats should leave him alone on the issue of abortion. That's right folks, why drill a nominee about important issues such as abortion? Why drill a nominee on a topic which might have further bearing on the way he evotes when the issue is at stake? Why not just stick to questions about what is Thomas' favoritie color and was he pulling for Jimmy Conners at the U.S. Open? Why indeed?

Cornett even goes as far as to state that we should believe that just because more blacks are voting Republican, they are "becoming more integrated into society." This is a blatant fallacy at which the black community has a right to be outraged. Should we believe that blacks are adjusting better to society simply because they are voting Republican? I think not. If the Kentucky Kernel insists on printing such closed-minded views as those often expressed by Cornett, please provide some form of opposing viewpoint. I would certainly welcome the opportunity myself seeing that I have much time on my hands and am not involved in the "Thousand Points of Light Society" like Cornett seems to be. To the editor:

Suzi Landolphi ("AIDS speaker seeks "sexuat evolution" ") in the Sept. 24 edition of the Kentucky Kernel certainly does have a message and she may be on a quest, but is Memorial Hall at UK the correct forum for her views? Your staff reporter wrote: "Suzi Landolphi is urging people to begin a "sexual evolution," creating a "hot, sexy and safer environment between people." Is UK sponsoring lectures encouraging its students to have sex, safe or not? If the University allows the or not? If the University allows the use of its facilities to promote sex among its students, who is paying for the facilities or for the speaker? The audience, the student body or the state? Were our fees used for this?

this? The tragedy of Landolphi's message is that many hearers may be lulled into thinking that sex is safe or OK. The truth is that practices that begin now will lay a foundation for a lifetime. Failed relationships that started from hot sex often continue into failed marriages, unfaithful marriage partners, unexpected and unfortunately unwanted children, and for some, AIDS. Sex in the trusting, faithful com-uren, and for some, AIDS.

Sex in the trusting, faithful committed bond of marriage is beautiful. Anything else is a lie. Men and women, it is OK to be viruous. Abstinence lays a foundation for future commitment, virtue and prevents transmission of deadly diseases.

AIDS not just a gay disease; risk to heterosexuals grows

Dear Counselor,

I am a junior at UK, a male and gay. I just found out last week that I am HIV positive. I feel like my life is over before it has even begun! My friends wonder what is wrong with me, whether they can help.

I am sure that if I told them, they would abandon me. Very few even know that I am gay. I've really kept that quiet, and there is nothing about me that would make people suspect that I am gay.

I am just miserable. If I think about it at all, I panie and cry. I can't setar and I've thought of suicide. Is there anything you can do for me?

I don't know what good it does to

Dear Desperate,
You're wrong. There are people who care. Even though I have never met you, I hear the pain in your words, and I do care what happens to you and others like you who are HIV positive. I will leave your medical condition to you and your doctor.

What I can do is speak to the pain that you are going through. Dealing with the acquired immune deficiency syndrome pandemic and with the problems of those who are worried about contracting AIDS (the worsted well) are major problems considered the contractions of the worsted well) are major problems conabout contacting Alba (the wor-ried well) are major problems con-fronting mental health profession-als. Many of us are trying to rise to meet your needs to the best of our abilities abilities.

There are several support groups in town that give comfort and support to People With AIDS (PWAs) and to people who are HIV positive. For information on these, contact Comprehensive Care in Lexington (254-0444) or AIDS Volunteers of Lexington (276-2865). In addition, there are organized groups of PWAs such as the Kentucky-Indiana People with AIDS Coalition (KIP-WAC) which sends out a newsletter

These groups are made up of a wide range of people from the community — as I hope you are aware, AIDS is not a gay disease. The straight (heterosexual) students on campus actually may be more at risk than gay students because the straight students do not believe they could be at risk.

Although AIDS heyan in the gay.

they could be at risk.

Although AIDS began in the gay community in the United States, in the countries from which AIDS is thought to have spread, it is a primarily heterosexual disease.

AIDS is now found in all segments of the U.S. population and is rapidly spreading through the heterosexual population and among IV drug users and their sexual contacts.

orng users and ment sexual contacts.

One memorable panel from the AIDS Memorial Quilt read something like the following (I have to paraphrase): I was an intelligent, college-educated woman. I never slept with a gay man or used IV drugs. I thought I was safe. Lack of education about AIDS killed me. I died angry. Remember me!

This was made by the woman a week before she died.

What I do not want you to do is die of the diagnosis! This is not a death sentence. It is an indication that you have a chronic condition of which to be aware. What do we know is that you may live a long time with this condition.

role in their therapies, both physical and emotional.

I congratulate you on the courage that it took for you to get tested for antibodies in the first place. This is the first step in taking charge. Other means of taking charge of your physical health can be explored with your physician.

Help in the way of emotional support is available both in the support groups off campus and at the Courseling Center on campus.

You need not worry about being judged — we are here to help you come to some accommodation with the facts you have been given.

Sharing your pain with a trained infliculty in which you frought the fear and anger that is evident in your words can lessen the emotional difficulty in which you find yourself. We want you to know you don't have to go through this alone.

Students who wish to address these issues can come by the UK Counseling and Testing Center, 301 Frazee Hall, or call 257-8701.
