

RELIEF?

According to the weather man you can leave that umbrella at home today because the chance of rain is 0 percent for today and tonight. The temperature will soar to the upper 40's so you can shed that heavy winter coat. But, alas, the skies will be partly cloudy so you will have to wait awhile longer to get a sunfan.

When educator meets legislator UK officials work quietly to advance the institution in Frankfort

By GREG HARTMANN
Assistant Managing Editor
UK doesn't lobby in Frankfort.

Instead, depending on which administrator you talk to, UK representatives who talk to members of the General Assembly discuss implications, set forth positions, get a point across, show UK's case, and make sure legislators know the facts.

Visits to Frankfort by top UK administrators have focused attention on UK's relationship to state government. On Jan. 31 President Otis Singletary went to Frankfort to discuss Senate Bill 54 with Gov. Wendell Ford and Senate Majority Leader Walter (Dee) Hudleston. On Feb. 3 he and Vice-president for Academic Affairs Lewis Cochran returned to testify before a House committee on HB 89, the publish or perish bill.

"I don't really think you can consider the University a lobbyist," said Dr. Glenwood Creech, vice-president for university relations. "Number one—we don't register as a lobbyist. We have no one over there representing us full time. And number two—we aren't representing a vested interest. We're representing all the people in this state who benefit from UK programs."

Creech, who has been to Frankfort only once this legislative session, stressed that the University tried to keep a "low profile." He has a copy of each of thirteen bills that could affect UK or higher education, but said there isn't a need for UK to "take a stand" on all of them.

Tom Duncan, director of UK's public information division also referred to UK's "low profile." He said he's been over to Frankfort four or five times this session, to pick up copies of bills and "make clear our position."

Lots of friends

"We've got a lot of real good friends in the legislature," Duncan said. He described his role as keeping up with new bills and making sure the legislators "know what the argument is against certain bills."

The bill that aroused the most interest is SB 54, which would have given U of L the power to set up its own community college system and extend its state-financed research programs beyond the Louisville area. UK opposed the measure, saying it should remain the only institution handling statewide services (such as Ag extension) and charged the duplication would be wasteful.

SB 54 was fought over in committee and amended before it finally reached the floor of the Senate Jan. 28. At that time U of L had succeeded in removing a clause which restricted

Can't hold convention here

UK denies People's Party space

By JOHN SCHENKENFELDER
Kernel Staff Writer

A Kentucky statute prohibiting students from using UK facilities has created a conflict between the People's Party of Kentucky and University administrators.

The conflict developed when People's Party tried to schedule a political convention on campus for Dr. Benjamin Spock, the party's presidential candidate.

Statute bars way

According to the statute, "University facilities shall not be used for political rallies or for campaign purposes that would further the interests of the candidate of any political party..."

The statute allows, "the meeting of student political groups which are open to attendance by students and faculty of the university, but which are not open to the general public."

Dr. Robert Zumwinkle, vice-president for student affairs, denied People's Party the use of UK facilities for the Saturday rally on the grounds that it would involve groups other than UK students and faculty.

Zumwinkle said he had conferred with the Office of Legal Council and this was their recommendation. The People's Party, he said, was organizing for a state convention.

Statute called unfair

Stevé Snell, temporary state coordinator and head of the Lexington chapter of the People's Party, complained about the regulation. In reference to other political groups sponsoring meetings he said, "It's unfair and it's not applied with any regularity. I think the intent behind the regulation is bad."

Along these lines Zumwinkle noted that the political meetings for congressional candidates Nutter and Curlin had been restricted to UK students and faculty. Otherwise, he said, they too would have been prohibited.

Party unregistered

Zumwinkle also asserted, "The fact that the group is not a registered party in the state is not a material factor here."

In order for the People's Party to receive official recognition as an independent party in the state,

SG sets General Assembly

Faculty attempts to revise the recently-liberalized Arts and Sciences general studies program will be discussed at a General Student Assembly tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Room 206, Student Center. Student Government President Scott Wendelsdorf will preside; all students are urged to come and voice their opinions on the proposed changes in general studies.

Police evict juveniles from Student Center

By MIKE BOARD
Kernel Staff Writer

The Student Center staff is helping LPD Juvenile Authorities expel nonstudents from the Student Center on weekends.

"In the last year and a half, we've had a considerable amount of local high school students, dropouts, and runaways in the building. This year there have been problems throughout the building," said Frank Harris, Student Center director.

According to Harris the action resulted from vandalism and recent UK student complaints of not being able to use Student Center facilities.

Hardcore group

The number of nonstudents has varied from four to 25 with a hard core group of about 15 hanging to put Gus Hall, general secretary of the Communist Party U.S.A., on the ballot for president in 1972.

Nobody sees red at UK in petition for Communist

If you signed a petition Friday, you may have helped put Gus Hall, general secretary of the Communist Party USA, on the Kentucky ballot in the next presidential election.

Members of the Kentucky Ballot Rights Committee were on campus getting signatures to put Hall and Jarvis Tyner, national chairman of the Young Workers Liberation League, on the presidential ballot in '72.

Alternative to reactionaries

According to Ed Case, Louisville, the petition (if effective) will offer an alternative to the "reactionary right-wing axis" composed of President Richard Nixon, Vice-president Spiro Agnew and Governor George Wallace.

Case said the Hall-Tyner platform has four major planks:

First, closing the Pentagon, withdrawing American troops from Europe and ending the war in Vietnam.

Second, ending the wage and price freeze, in an attempt to keep money from going to the military-industrial complex.

Third, release of all political prisoners such as Angela Davis in the United States.

Fourth, working for the rights of workers and students and to fight against such current policies as "education cutbacks."

OK to petition

According to University Legal Counsel John C. Darsie the petitioners were not violating any University or state laws by being on campus.

Darsie explained that the University has "tried to draw a distinction between using a half and simply walking across campus."

Women plan convention strategy

By KATIE MCCARTHY
Kernel Staff Writer
More than 400 women from 12 Southern states met in Nashville, Tenn., this weekend to plan the election of women as delegates to the national political conventions this summer. The bipartisan Southern Women's Conference on Education for Delegate Selection was the first of its kind in the South.

Bella Abzug, New York Congresswoman and co-chairman of the National Women's Political Caucus, keyed the conference. She praised the conference for "creating a new kind of strategy for '72—a political strategy for women who have been shut out of power and who are determined that this is the year to win full citizenship and participation in political decision."

Learn about selection

On delegate selection, Abzug told the women to "learn the procedures" and "make sure male politicians don't try to use their wives, aunts, sisters as representatives of women in the delegation."

She urged the women to seek 50 percent of the positions of the delegations in their state, along with representation of racial minorities and young people according to their percentage of the total state population. She asked, "How long can a nation endure non-representation for half the population?"

'Woman power-72'

Despite their choice of candidates, Abzug urged the women to unite under the slogan "Womanpower-72" for "what's good for women will turn out to be good for this country."

Other speakers at the conference were Jeanette Rankin, 91, the first woman to be elected to Congress, and Caroline Bird, author of "Born Female" and contributing editor of "New Woman" magazine.

Workshops were held on party rules, reforms, procedures, challenges and approaches for organizing and educating women for the political process.

The National Democratic

Party's McGovern-Fraser Commission on Party Structure and Delegate Selection was explained at one workshop. The guidelines set down by this commission demand that state delegations to the national conventions consist of 50 percent women, 30 percent 18 to 30-year-olds and a proportionate representation of minority groups.

The participants were told these guidelines are "absolutely binding" if they are adopted by the state and the state party should be challenged if these guidelines are not enforced. Kentucky adopted the commission's guidelines in January.

In 1968, only 13 percent of the delegation's members were women at the Democratic convention and only 17 percent were women at the Republican convention.

Procedures for delegate selection in the individual states were given at separate state meetings. A large number of Kentucky women representing the League of Women Voters, the Lexington and Kentucky Women's Political Caucuses, the Kentucky Civil Liberties Union, and National Council of Negro Women and other groups met and discussed strategy for the upcoming delegate selection conventions in Kentucky.

around the music room. "They've broken furniture and left a fantastic mess of the room constantly," said Harris. "The staff and I have even received calls from parents complaining that their runaway son or daughter is in the Student Center. They even accuse us of harboring juveniles," said Harris. The City and County police have also received these complaints, added Harris.

Had to act
"I knew we had a problem and I knew the problem had to be solved. I acted while we could still control it and be on the initiating end rather than waiting on being told what to do," said Harris.

"We thought it was a good idea to call in the juvenile officers because we were dealing with high school students of Lexington," Burch said.

Last weekend was the second time nonstudents were asked to leave the building.

"They can come as a guest of another student or carry on their business in the cafeteria," said Pete Winans, staff member.

"We're not saying they can't be in there. We just want to break up the idea that it is a good place to hang out," added Burch.

"Basically, though, we're not a public facility. We're a facility for students. Students at this University pay me to run the facility for students and to keep it going for them," explained Harris.

UK students kicked out
The major problem, however, is that some UK students are getting "kicked out" because they don't have their ID cards with them in the Student Center.

The Student Center Director advised all students to carry their ID cards whenever they are in the Student Center.

Five to three you'll like our change

Today The Kentucky Kernel begins a new policy for its editorial pages. Instead of running five full pages of editorials and soapboxes each week, we are reducing the number of pages to three a week, plus an "opposite-editorial" page weekly.

The reasons for the switch are simple. Editors have long felt the quality of The Kernel's editorial pages could not be sustained when two or three staff members were required to grind out ten to 12 editorials each week, in addition to their management duties.

And this year, the fierce competition between news and advertising for space in the paper has led us to decide we can better inform students and staff by allowing more pages for news and less for opinions.

As a result, the Kernel will run editorial pages on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, with an "op-ed" page appearing weekly. The op-ed page will be devoted to soapboxes, letters, and columns; editorial pages will continue to feature the editors' opinions and letters.

One facet of our pages, however, will remain the same: despite the smaller volume of editorials produced by our staff, The Kernel will continue to run letters and soapboxes submitted in line with editorial policies appearing on this page. Readers' opinions will receive the same attention as before, and new columns are planned to brighten the op-ed page when it appears.

We hope the more relaxed deadlines will enable us to write better, more complete editorials. And as before, we solicit your opinions on this and other Kernel policies affecting the campus.

Health insurance Quite a lot for seven dollars

Probably no other action this year has caused so much controversy and been as misunderstood as the University's compulsory health insurance plan.

Students have objected to the complexity of the plan as well as to the fact that the insurance is compulsory for all fulltime students. Many students have worried that they will not be able to graduate or pre-register because they have not paid their seven dollars yet.

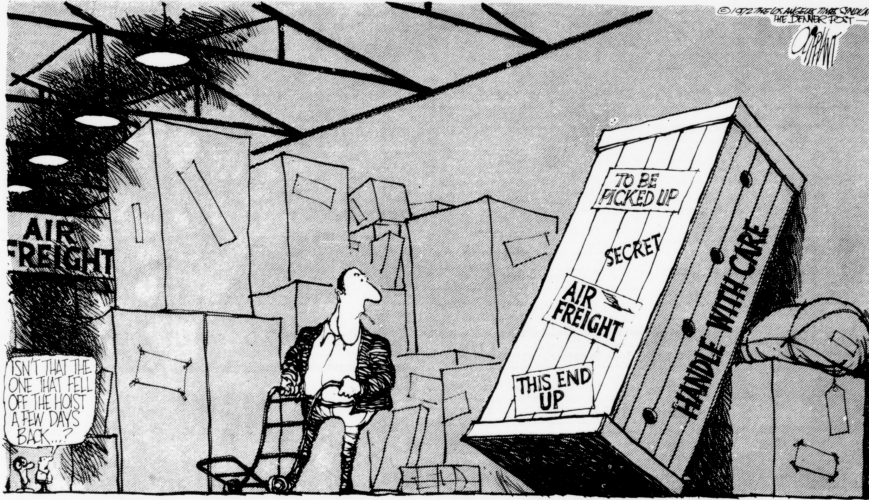

What many have failed to consider, however, are the benefits of the plan, and its relatively low cost. For just seven dollars students get X-rays, blood tests and visits to any of the Medical Center's specialty clinics. Furthermore, the money collected from the insurance will be used by the Health Service to provide additional services as they can be paid for.

The compulsory insurance looks even better when one compares it to other Lexington hospitals and clinics. Any student who has gone somewhere other than Student Health to get treated can testify to the high costs at other hospitals.

Admittedly, for students who already have adequate health insurance, the compulsory insurance is an unnecessary expense, but waivers are not really that hard to get.

For the student who has no other health insurance, seven dollars really doesn't seem that much when one considers the service and peace of mind the money buys.

Uof L vs. UK

In response to your recent editorial entitled "Can We Afford Two Principal Institutions?" we would like to say that fear of U of L's potential for growth seems to be President Singletary's only logical motive for saying such irresponsible, vicious, and untrue statements about U of L. He stated that U of L has managed its funds irresponsibly. However, our football team experienced a much greater success while operating on a budget less than half the size of UK's.

For Mr. Singletary's information, we would like to announce that U of L is already a principal institution and has been for over a century. The School of Medicine, established in the early 1800's, provides the state of Kentucky with over 75 percent of its physicians.

The only reason more students attend UK is because tuition is three times higher at U of L. However, if U of L is put on an equal basis with UK, tuition will be reduced, and this is what Mr. Singletary is more afraid of. Then, UK will lose not only a portion of its funds to U of L, but also a great many of its students, who would prefer to attend U of L but can't afford to because of the tuition.

In relation to the fight over who is who in state research, we don't think research should be centered in Lexington which carries an agricultural atmosphere because of its surrounding horse and dairy farms. The urban crisis is much more important today in the overpopulated world we live in.

Why has U of L been held back in the past? Mainly because of its budget. Its funds came only from the city of Louisville, while UK's came from the State.

This presents another argument for U of L. Up to the last biennium, the city of Louisville has been entirely supporting U of L, but its one million citizens have also been paying taxes to the State to give to UK. So, for the time before U of L became a state institution, Louisvillians were competing against themselves because they were paying educational taxes to the State, of which U of L was getting none of these funds in return. But with U of L's entrance into the state system, we believe this will all change.

Kentucky abortions

In a nationwide survey of 1,700 men and women conducted by Opinion Research Corporation for the Commission on Population Growth and the American Future 50 percent said that abortion is a decision for a couple and their doctor, 41 percent said abortions should be permitted "only under certain circumstances," 6 percent were opposed to abortion under any circumstances and 3 percent had no opinion.

Kentucky law prohibits abortion except to save the life of a woman. Thus only those women who can afford a trip to New York can get competent medical care when they need an abortion.

Now is the critical time for both those who favor and those who oppose change in the law. If you would like to see the anti-abortion law repealed write to Lexington's Representative William Kenton, House of Representatives, Frankfort, Kentucky 40601. He is chairman of a subcommittee that is now considering changes in this law. Lexington Representative David Van Horn is also a member of this subcommittee.

'We do not advocate war'

ROTC controversy revolves around moral question of killing

By TIM BALLARD
Kernel Staff Writer

"We in the military, and as instructors at the University, do not advocate war. We have been too close to it... We do not in the classroom advocate subscription to war or to a war," wrote Col. Eugene Small, head of UK's ROTC section, to Rebecca Westerfield, now SG vice-president, in September, 1970.

Westerfield had written in a Kernel soapbox the previous April 9 that "ROTC values are plainly not in accord with the values of a conscientious educational institution."

The verbal war ended, at least for the summer, with AFROTC senior Ken Overturf writing in the April 30 Kernel, "... we do NOT in AFROTC learn how to kill people, burn babies, march in conformity of thoughtless vegetables..."

Demonstrations
As April ended President Nixon sent troops into Cambodia to destroy communist sanctuaries. In the wake of this action came student demonstrations across the country.

Following in the aftermath of the Kent State killings was a demonstration held at UK May 5. Some 500 students, carrying four coffins to symbolize the four dead students, marched from the Complex to Buell Armory.

They stopped there, some occasionally throwing rocks through the Armory's windows. One graduate student, Mason Taylor, was arrested for disorderly conduct when he threw a rock.

While the demonstrators waited, a fireball appeared over the Student Center, leading some, as Ron Hawkins wrote in the May 6 Kernel, "to believe the Student Center was on fire."

"Eventually, the students realized it was the Air Force ROTC building which was aflame..."

Despite the efforts of Lexington firemen, the AFROTC building was a total loss. The site, across from the Student Center, has since been developed into an area for basketball and volleyball.

Reorganized
With the controversy renewed the following September and continued into the 1971 spring semester, and Arts and Sciences Ad Hoc Committee on ROTC presented a three-part proposal that would change the ROTC departments.

Incorporated into this proposal were that ROTC and AFROTC be reduced from departments to divisions; that the divisions' staff members be recognized by their military titles rather than academic; and that no credit be given toward graduation for courses offered by the divisions, while up to 12 credits would be allowed in the ROTC divisions for courses taken within recognized colleges of the University.

Survey
Last November Maj. David M. Phillips of the Military Science Department conducted a survey on ROTC for his Research and Report Writing class (BA 636).

Questionnaires, containing 11 questions about the ROTC programs and questions about age, sex and military service, were mailed to all University faculty, staff and administration members.

Of the 715 people who replied, 53.9 percent were between 21 and 40 years old, 84.3 percent were male and 50.8 percent had served in the armed forces.

Exactly 80 percent agreed, either strongly or generally, that ROTC and AFROTC should be offered at UK, but only 58.8 percent thought ROTC courses should receive academic credit.

On the question of whether ROTC and AFROTC should have departmental status, 55 percent agreed and 30.9 percent disagreed.

ROTC changes
Despite these statistics, the University Senate, composed of some 175 members, predominantly faculty, voted Monday night to reduce the two ROTC departments to programs. The Senate also voted to give the College of Arts and Sciences control over a standing committee on ROTC.

Col. Small called the program status "ill-defined," while Col. Arthur Nicholson, AFROTC chairman, said he did not feel the new status would improve the AFROTC program.

What is the background of these programs that have led such stormy, controversial lives?

History
Army ROTC was established at UK in 1917 after the passage of the National Defense Act of 1916. It had its predecessor in the figure of Col. William E. Arnold, who became professor of military science in 1866, one year after the founding of the University, as a land-grant college under the Morrill Act of 1862. Among the provisions of this act was that all land-grant colleges were to offer some type of military training.

Military instruction was mandatory, and by 1900 all male students at UK were required to stand reveille and do calisthenics at six a.m.

AFROTC was established as an elective at UK in 1946, while ROTC remained compulsory until 1963.

Presently, ROTC has been banned from 14 eastern campuses, among them Yale, Harvard and Dartmouth. A decision last month at Princeton will permit the program to be re-established there, but on a much reduced scale.

The Reserve Officer Training Corps has had a turbulent history at UK in the last few years, from the firebombing of the AFROTC building in May 1970 to this month's attempts to redefine the nature of the ROTC programs.

UK has known Army ROTC since 1917, and Air Force ROTC since 1946. Until 1963 all UK males had to take part in drilling. What the future of ROTC on the Lexington campus will be, no one can say. (Kernel photo by Bill Elder.)

Denounces present system as racist and sexist

Miller calls for 'movement of people'

By NEILL MORGAN
Kernel Staff Writer

Laura Miller, a member of the national executive committee of the Young Socialist Alliance, last Friday called for the abandonment of the present political system.

Miller, who called the YSA "a wave of the future," said that "change won't come by electing a politician" but only by building a movement of people.

"Both the Democrats and Republicans all basically support the way the country is run," she said, denouncing the present system as racist and sexist.

Miller, who was sponsored by the Student Government, was scheduled to speak about "the student revolt and the 1972 elections" but at the last minute decided to have a rap session with the 12 people present.

As an alternative to the present political system she offered the YSA, which is backing Socialist Worker Party candidates Linda Jenness for president and Andrew Pulley for vice-president. However, Jenness at 31 and Pulley at 21 are both under the minimum age required by the Constitution for holding these offices.

But Miller said that the purpose of their campaign was not to win, but to give the people candidates they can support without compromising their beliefs. "In fact," she said, "if we were to win the ruling class would probably cancel the election." (She characterized the ruling class as the three percent who control the other 97 percent of the people.)

"Free elections are really a myth," she said.

Referring to those who think that the "movement" is dead, Miller said that it is more active now than ever but since May of 1970 it has been less provocative. She cited as examples Women's Liberation, Gay Liberation and the chicano movement.

USA not moving right

In response to a discussion that the country is going to the right she said, "The country is not on the verge of fascism, if we were Nixon would not have a peace platform."

"We (YSA) are not a bunch of grinning idiots," she said, "but we are the only group on the left that is optimistic."

On some of the major issues Miller contrasted her party with the others:

The Vietnam War: "We are the only party that calls for immediate and unconditional withdrawal from Vietnam. All others specify some sort of guarantee."

Abortion: Miller said that their candidates were the only ones that advocated complete repeal of all abortion laws. "Even George McGovern supports liberalization only when he is pressed and Nixon is against it for personal reasons."

Racism: Miller said the YSA supported an independent black political party and an independent chicano party. "We are the only group on the left that supports black nationalism."

Rights of the young: Miller said the fact that their candidates are under the legal age "proves we are serious about pressing for the rights of the young."

UK lobbies quietly but effectively

its service programs to the Louisville area. On Jan. 31 Singletary made his visit to Ford and Huddleston.

On Feb. 2 a compromise amendment made UK the "principal" state university authorized to use state funds for wide-area programs. U of L could direct statewide programs, but only if it did so with federal money. The bill passed the next day and went to the House, where it is expected to pass easily.

A key figure in much of the committee infighting over amendments was Sen. Gibson Downing, D-Lexington. A graduate of the UK Law School, he is considered by UK administrators a "friend" of the University.

Graduates are friends

"The people most likely to be interested in the welfare of the institution are its own graduates," Creech said. He keeps a list of legislators, marked to show who has UK ties. (According to the list, 10 senators and 19 representatives either took courses here or at the community colleges.)

"If a bill were introduced that might impair some University service, these are the people we'd check with first," Creech explained. "We know they'd at least listen to us."

Creech has another list, which indexes legislators by community college districts. "If something comes up that would affect one of our community colleges, we know whose district would be involved, and don't have to waste eight hours looking it up," Creech said.

Past lobbying

UK and U of L have made headlines with past lobbying efforts. During the 1968 session, U of L treated legislators to a social at Kentucky Dam Village and two evenings of dinner and a basketball game. UK also offered a dinner and basketball game, ("so we could tell them things that would make them proud of UK," according to Creech.)

Sen. Romano Mazzoli, D-Louisville, protested UK's actions, (but not U of L's), noting that UK was financed entirely by public funds. (UK has since dropped the dinners, but still gives free basketball tickets to legislators and high state government officials.)
