Football Souvenir

Golden Jubilee Number, October 14, 1916

By Jno. J. Tigert, Athletic Director.

To Richard C. Stoll and all those who by their struggles on the gridiron and elsewhere have brought honor to their Alma Mater and themselves, this book is affectionately dedicated.

(Mr. Stoll was a member of the football squad in '91 and '92; played fullback and end on the '93 and '94 teams; was a member of the '94 track team winning the intercollegiate relay, captain of the '95 track team, and manager of the '94 baseball team. On October 7, 1908, the athletic field was named Stoll Field by unanimous vote of the Athletic Association.)

Little Joe's Tribute to Football

(Written by Joseph H. Kastle for Miriam Clay's Souvenir of 1904)

But few things in all the world are more beautiful and glorious than the Autumn season in Old Kentucky, and but few days more sacred to the American people than Thanksgiving Day. A wealth of days of golden warmth and sunshine, mellowed and softened by the bluish haze of burning Autumn leaves; and nights made cheerful by the open fire—an atmosphere that still reflects the glories of departing Summer and redolent of burning leaf and ripening fruit and dying flower—the burnished gold of the harvest and the brilliant oriflamme of the monarchs of the forest—the silken rustle of the falling leaf—the call of migratory bird and fowl—these and more all go to make our Autumn the glad fulfillment of the promise of the year.

Each season brings its customs that have been sweetened by time and hallowed by long continued usage. The mistletoe and the yule log, the Thanksgiving turkey and the mince pie, the Christmas carol and the Easter song, holly, flowers and gifts, the weird witchery of Halloween, the happy New Year's greeting, all in their several ways mark the swift passing of the years of our youth and bring to the old their tenderest memories. And so along with the other customs, games and pastimes that have come to us from our old Fatherland, across the sea, there has come this great Rugby game of football, and from ancient saga and war-song and battle-cry there has come the college song and yell. In the hands of the American boy, with his dauntless pluck and courage, this game has been so strengthened and developed that in comparison all other college sports, if not all sports of every character, dwindle into insignificance. If the racing of the thoroughbred is indeed the sport of kings, football is the sport of men. It has come to have a far deeper significance than could possibly attach to any mere game. It stands for strength and courage and for the ability to dare and do. It stands for clean, right living; for self-control and for the grit to abstain from anything that weakens or degrades. It demands of those who would participate therein weeks and sometimes months and even years of careful training and preparation. To win a football game requires a general and a leader of men. * * * *

The man or the woman who only sees in these great contests the struggles of young athletes as yard by yard they carry the ball for a touchdown through a struggling mass of humanity has failed entirely to grasp the true inwardness of the situation and is indeed blind to the signs of the times. In reality the game of football is a contest of ideals and principles that in themselves are as old and deep-rooted and abiding as the race itself.

Some day, not far remote, these boys who now so proudly wear the K upon the blue sweater will be the players, quarters, fullbacks, ends and tackles on the broad gridiron of life. If they are leaders now they will be leaders then, and by bucks and double passes and long runs around the end, following their interference, they will score the touchdowns in the swift onrush of human progress and endeavor. At this glad season, therefore, let us who are maturer men be thankful for our boys.

The Wildcats' Most Loyal Rooter

THE GREAT 1893 TEAM. GARRED, CAPTAIN.
