Food Services may serve meals from franchises next semester

By the end of this school year, UK students may be able to eat at a brand-name food restaurant on campus, in addition to UK Food Services' present offerings.

"We are seriously looking at bringing in some branded concepts on campus," said Robert Braun, director of UK Food Services, "It's a tedious process, but our intent is to have some branded concepts on campus available to students."

Braun said that food services hopes to buy franchises of branded products to supplement present campus food service locations.

"What we would like to do is to be the franchisee, and we would operate it." he said. "We would look at areas where we are not providing adequate menu items and go

Original plans called for the branded food operations to be in place by the Thanksgiving holiday, but, because of delays in negotiations, Braun said he hopes to have them open sometime during the spring semester.

Because the negotiations, with

He added that since each brand has its own licensing terms, each has to be looked into individually. Some have high start-up costs, which UK's food services cannot afford.

"Every one has to be done separately," Braun said. "There are several we are making real good progress with, though."

Braun said that if UK becomes the franchisee of a branded food operation, that operation would be fully incorporated into UK food services, and students would be able to use their diner cards at those locations.

"We want to make this a part of overall food service to students," he said. "It depends on how all of this goes, but our intent is to make it available to diner card students."

Some branded products are al-ready sold through campus food service locations, Braun said, but they are not actively advertised.

Researcher studies children and alcohol

Political analyst Kevin Phillps participates in a panel discussion yesterday afternoon in the Student Center Theater.

Children who believe drinking alcohol enhances their social lives are most at risk for becoming adolescent problem drinkers, a UK researcher said Monday. Greg Smith, an assistant professor of psychology, recently published a study titled "Psychological Expectancy as Mediator of Vulnerability to Alcoholism."

ability to Alcoholism."
It is one in a series of studies concerning alcoholism published by Smith and colleagues.
For several years, Smith has researched risk factors for adolescent alcohol abuse. He said his work focuses on what children and adolescents learn about alcohol's effects through their parents' and peers' behavior and through the mass media.

"We are trying to study what goes on during the childhood years that leads children to expect unreasonable benefits from drinking and, thus, puts them at risk for problem drinking." Smith said.

The study focused on third-grade children, ages nine and 10.

"If we ask kids before they drink what they think about drinking, the ones who think alcohol will help their social lives and cognitive and motor functions are at the gratest risk." Smith said. "They drink heavily very early, at ages 13, 14 or 15."

It is important to find out how

Terri Miller, a psychology gradu-ate student working with Smith, is studying children's perceptions of their parents' drinking habits and whether those children had any drinking experiences themselves.

The earlier studies involved chil-dren in suburban Detroit. Miller's study was conducted with children in Fayette County. Smith currently is conducting a study of children in Eastern Kentucky.

Smith said he wants to see if Eastern Kentucky children's pro-cesses of learning about alcohol dif-fers from the processes of the chil-dren in the earlier studies.

"The data is collected. We're in the process of analyzing that data now and will have the results in six months or so," Smith said.

Library offers increased security for night hours

Students who venture out in the middle of the night to study at Margaret 1. King Library will not be alone there. The library provides security guards for those who take advantage of the new nighttime hours. "Because we'd like to maintain the library security at late hours and to have immediate responses to anti-social behaviors, we asked the UK Police Department for help," said Judith Brown, head of circulation at the library.

said Judin Brown, lead of circula-tion at the library.
"Through the UK Police Depart-ment's contract with (Andy Frain Services), we are having one securi-ty guard with us during night hours whenever the library is open 24 hours."

Brown said the security guard asks people who arrive or leave the library between 11 p.m. and 7 a.m. to sign in and out on the log sheet.

"And, it is partly in case there might be a need to evacuate the building if a fire or other emergen-cies happen at night.

In addition, the Student Government Association, working in conjunction with the UK Police Department and the ROTC program, offers an on-campus evening escort service.

Teams have submitted their lists of 15 players who can't be chosen by the Florida Martins and Colorado Rockies in the three-round draft. Teams can lose one player per round. National League teams will be allowed to protect three additionat players after the first and second rounds. American League teams can protect four.

Cooper to return to Cool Cats

By Chris Tipton

Chad Cooper is coming back to Kentucky and to the UK hockey club.

Cooper, a native of Jackson, Mich., was the club's leading scorer in all three of his season with the Cool Cats. He has been playing for the varsity hockey team at Western Michigan but now plans to return to his former team.

"Super Coop," as he was nicknamed by the Cool Cats' fans, may be back on the ice this weekend as the hockey team takes on Denison at the Lexing-ton Ice Center.

Cooper plans to play in the rest of the Cool Cats' home games and to transfer back to UK for the spring semester.

"Chad called me a few weeks ago from Michigan and said that he missed playing," club vice president Jason Smithwick said. "He also said that he missed all of his friends down here."

"Chad brings a lot of all-around experience and scoring to the team. The younger players should be able to look up to him and learn from him," Pelligreen said.

"Since he was good enough to make it on to a Division I team, he can't really hurt us too much."

UK-IU tickets available tomorrow at 4:30 lottery

A lottery for tickets to UK's Jan. 2 basketball game against Indiana will be held tomorrow for students at Memorial Coliseum.

The game will be played at Freedom Hall in Louisville, Ky., at either 1 p.m. or 3:30 p.m. The game will be nationally televised on ESPN.

Doors for the lottery will open at 4:30 p.m. and close at 4:45.

Students will be given small sheets of paper with random numbers on them as they enter the coliseum. Numbers will be called, and students with lowest numbers will be allowed to purchase tickets first.

The cost of the tickets is S25, and each student may purchase two tickets. Only UK students will be allowed to use the tickets. UK personnel will be at Freedom Hall to check UK ID as a students enter the arena. No guest tickets will be available during the lottery.

South Carolina compliance officer David Didion has said the university broke NCAA rules by allowing an ineligible recruit, Corne Barnes, to sky in the athletic dorm and receive practice gear. Both would be considered major violations under NCAA guidelines.

Didion is continuing his investigation, which one school official said would probably uncover other violations. Newton, who was hired after a 57-4ay search, refused to comment when he met with reporters before practice.

Reporters repeatedly asked Newton about the probe, but each time Newton, obviously nervous, looked down at his handwritten statement and repeated that the university asked him not to comment. Clinton administration should make economy number one priority

EDITORIAL

President-elect Bill Clinton has made a lot of promises while campaigning — so many that he went hoarse in the final days of his bid for the presidency. Now, he must deliver results to the American people.

As President Bush, Vice President Quayle and Ross Perot said, now is the time to rally around our newly elected president.

Clinton has a difficult task. He must help the country while re-ducing the deficit and do so without heavily taxing the American

Job development could be the key to economic security, and Clinton must work to create a plan to do this. He must learn and continue, as Bush has, to open new world markets for our country. Our economy is no longer national, but international.

We must have urban renewal without the dependency on government created by Roosevelt's New Deal. Jobs must be given to people as a progression to something better—not a parasitic state.

Education funding and reform is also essential. He must enact his plans to make college available to more people and develop a reliable system of payment. Loan defaults will drain the country as they have our banking system.

An intricate health-care plan that steers clear of socialization needs to be developed. Health care is essential for our survival, and reasonable rates are not too much to ask.

The limiting and regulation of firearms, as well as the protection of our greatest resource — the earth, also is an important part of Clinton's administration.

President-elect Clinton has recently been resting at the governor's mansion. He needs his rest now, for his work will begin very soon.

The answer is not a regularly scheduled neo-hippic gathering in Frankfort, Ky, or Washington, D.C., but grassroots education of the people.

Read some books to help enjoy life

Why can't life be a book? Real life is very disenchanting. I had been up in the morning, bit the nooze button about 12,000 times, o to class, daydream, go to the set of my classes, daydream and o back to my dorm at the end of height progression to go a dor life for express not not on.

When I get back to my dorn room. I look for any release to get away from real flife. By the end of the day. I am tired of hearing about Bill Clinton, the alleged "savior of the nation," and George Bush, the lame duck who was in a fend for our years with the supporters of the "savior." (Yes, I'm Republican.)
How did you guess?)

I find escapes in several places. Television provides a meager measure of relief, but it is too filled with the issues that I am trying to escape from.

with the issues that I am trying to escape from.

Movies provide a bit more relief, but they get expensive, especially for a college student spending his parents' money. Music supplies release, but the process of selecting music I like or enduring music that other people like gets tiresome after a while.

Since I have come to college, I have rediscovered a reliable, comfortable resource that is totally under my control and costs very little money. That resource is reading.

Reading brings pleasure that incontrol communicated in a simple column. The joy of reading

I think anyone looking for a break from normal life should pick up a good book and read it. I promise that normal life can wait until you finish. I am going to go read now. Adios.

College students not all partiers like stereotypes

To the editor

For decades, the advertising me-dia has portrayed university and college students as being full-time partiers.

This advertised image is one this advertised image is one where students do hardly any studying or school work, and instead drink and act crazy all the time. However, this is far from the reality on UK's campus.

Similar to nearly all the college campuses across the country, most of the students here don't fit this advertised image that we're expected to fit Instead, we're almost the oppo-ite, for we have our educations

Thousands of students at UK manage to have fun without using my depressants or stimulants.

We don't fit this advertising im age of college for we don't need drugs to enjoy our college experi ence.

We manage not to participate despite all the ads we see and hear that want us to believe otherwise — including ads in this very publication and liquor store ads on lunch tables.

This image is imbedded in our minds almost everywhere we go, for even the school allows it. It would be virtually impossible to go a day at UK without being reminded of this image.

It has become so common that many students have come to believe it is true (a sad reality).

However, there still is a student majority that believes that college can be a great experience without fitting this image and keeping all the Lexington bars in business for years to come.

We prefer all material to be type-written and double-spoced, but others are welcome if they are levelible.

School must pull together or sink with cuts

I write this commentary before the election, so I am unaware of the results. However, I doubt the outcome of this political spectacle will have a drastic impact on our university, our state or our nation.

Decades of mismanagement have gone into the evention of our present economic quagmire, and we can expect no flat to crase generations of accumulated entropy. In short, we at UK should brace for continuation of the financial hardships we now endure and abandon hope of a sudden turnabout. Local headlines this week have shifted from the drama of the election to the plight of our universities.

hour. Decai neadmine his week have shirted from the drama of the election to the plight of our university, as we will likely receive another budget cut.

It occurs to me that Kentucky's 'Tlagship university' is a severely erropled vessel, and few aboard seem willing to make the sacrifices necessary to keep it afloat.

As evidenced last week during Chancellor for the Lexington Campus Robert Hennemay's several convocations, many persons at UK are justifiably concerned with job security. No explicit layoffs have occurred, yet, but the possibility of staff layoff's is overshadowing more imminent diagrees facing the University community.

more imminent tangers many to University community.

In particular, the crushing freeze on faculty recruitment and the con-tinued insistence on an inefficient, fragmented administrative struct are key breaches in the infra-structure of our battered campus.

At the same time, tenure denials and the hirring freeze prevent the infusion of new vitality in the University. Many tenured faculty, demoralized by the whole UK situation, are ready to abandon ship in favor of better jobs at better schools.

Sacrifices need to be made from the top down. The efficiency of the administrative structure can be increased, but it would probably require massive restructuring within and across departments, and loss of positions from the level of chancellors and deans on down.

Sugar-coated fantasies aside, there will be casualities to the University in the coming years. We must not let the University itself become a casualty.
Everyone must sacrifice, must get by with less and do more to contribute to the campus as a whole. Students must sympathize with the stresses on their instructors and realize that success in class means more independent initiative.

This initiative should be encouraged by faculty and administration.
Creative proposals need to be developed and seriously considered.

And most of all, the people at the top must set an example through sacrifice. If they sacrifice, most of the rest of us will follow suit. Orievise, we all go under, and there will be no recovery.

That would mirror the approach taken for years by the Republicans, who have always dedicated party resources to constantly preparing for the next presidential election.

Emanuel is mentioned as likely to play a major role in organizing Clinton's inaugural before moving on, either to an administration post or senior position at the DNC.

As they do the early planning of a political operation, the senior Clinton aides have marveled to find that many of them are looking for new cars — some to replace foreign nameplates, others to trade up to a shiny new model.

Emanuel is looking for a Ford Explorer to replace a pickup: Ste-phanopoulos' Honda is being re-placed by a made-in-America Sat-urn: Withelm's four-year-old Oldsmobile is headed for a trade-in, too.

"We promised we'd focus first on the economy," Wilhelm joked yesterday. "This is our start."

As the 1990s dawned, news events seemed to point to an era of great promise for Eu-rope: communism had fallen, ending the Soviet Union's grip on the east, while the afflorent nations of the west, centuries of strife behind them, were pre-paring for political and eco-nomic unity. Instead the decade has seen the rise of nationalism and xen-ophobia.

Phillips said the country has shifted from foreign affairs to new do-mestic issues like health care and the environment.

Phillips also said that that the 1980s resembled the 1920s in that both periods had a Republican and conservative government, both started with a common circum-stance of the public's believing the government was too big and, among many other similarities, in-dustry rose.

Drillips also is a contributing col-umnist for The Los Angeles Times, a regular commentator for National Public Radio and CBS Network Ra-dio. Phillips has written other politi-cal works, including "The Emerg-ing Republican Majority," "Electoral Reform" and "Post-Conservative America."

Bush budget offers nothing new

WASHINGTON — In a depar-ture from recent outgoing presi-dents, President Bush will submit a bare-bones federal budget in Janu-ary that will seek no new tax or spending changes, administration and congressional officials said yes-terday.

Clinton will be sworn in on Jan. 20. The law requires the president to submit his budget for the upcoming fiscal year by the first Monday in February, which next year will be Feb. 1.

But the law does not require him to submit a budget if the outgoing president has done so Clinton might need an extension from Congress if Budy's blugprint is so sparse that it is not considered a budget for purposes of meeting the Feb. 1 requirement.
