Fourth year.—Moral Philosophy, including the first principles of Jurisprudence, and of Natural and Revealed Religion, Forensics, Political Economy, English and American History, and Logic.

The French, Spanish, German and Italian Languages are regularly taught, and two of them at least must be studied in order to obtain a Diploma.

THE general principle of the whole course is, that every young man shall be fully and profitably employed, while he continues; and that particular exercise will be continued, or changed, as the circumstances of any individual, or of any particular class, may demand; and no one shall be encouraged to continue in attendance, who does not afford promise of becoming, in due time, a respectable scholar, and a useful man.

It can no longer be concealed, that there are, and that there have been for years, in Oxford, a few individuals, who have systematically ensnared always some, sometimes a considerable number, of the youth, who were attending Miami University, into unnecessary and destructive expenses, particularly in the article of GROCERIES. A large majority of the people of Oxford are ready to assist in every good work, and to assist in good works only; but there are still a few, both in the village and township, who cannot find any way to support themselves and families, but by furnishing the means of destruction to the unwary and unprotected. Parents will,
