Legislators react coolly to Wilkinson's 'people's budget'

By MARK R. CHELLGREN
Associated Press

FRANKFORT, Ky. — Gov. Wallace Wilkinson outlined a "people's budget" yesterday to an audience of legislators who appeared cool to his claim that it provides a historic opportunity for Kentucky and its children.

"In my opinion, this is our best and maybe our only chance to address these concerns," Wilkinson said.

The speech, which lasted almost an hour and 15 minutes, included a recapitulation of the highlights of Wilkinson's proposed $8.5 billion General Fund budget for the coming two fiscal years and the $1 billion tax increase the governor said is needed to provide the services.

The speech was Wilkinson's first shot at face-to-face selling of his budget and tax ideas to the General Assembly since they were introduced, yet the reaction from the senators and representatives assembled for a joint session was little more than polite.

"I think it's fair to label this budget a people's budget," Wilkinson said. "After two years of common sacrifice, I can now report that our commonwealth is on sound financial footing and that our budget's priorities truly reflect our people's priorities."

Only twice was Wilkinson's speech interrupted by applause, and in neither case was it prompted by legislators. Major gubernatorial addresses in the last decade have received warm, sometimes even raucous responses from legislators.

Legislators speculated that the response may have been muted because details of the budget had been doled out by Wilkinson over the past two weeks.

Still, Wilkinson took pains to point out what he believed were the highlights of his spending plan as well as to begin lobbying for its adoption.

"I welcome your interest, constructive revision and improvements," Wilkinson said. "I believe we have a sound package that must be enacted. We shall not soon have this opportunity again. We cannot afford to squander it."

Wilkinson emphasized his budget's new funding for education at all levels, and recommended a school reform package that reflects his long-held advocacy of school-based management, performance standards and curriculum changes.

"This is the beginning of a great day and a great session for education in Kentucky," Wilkinson said.

WINDOW OF OPPORTUNITY: Lexingtonian Leslie Powell, a UK medical student, studied on the second floor in Margaret I. King Library yesterday afternoon.

UK's black population rose slightly since 1978

Associated Press
and Staff reports

FRANKFORT, Ky. — The University of Louisville is the only state school to dramatically increase its black student population since 1978, according to the Kentucky Council on Higher Education.

UK's number was only slightly higher than its mark that year.

"My feeling is that I'm not that concerned with the number of students we get, but what we do after we get them," said UK Vice Chancellor for Minority Affairs William Parker.

Parker said that 79 percent of UK's black students graduate, "and that's a rate that exceeds white students."

"There are some plans to increase the number of (black) students on campus but the best way to recruit students is to take care of the ones we have," Parker said. "And I think we do that very successfully."

While most state public universities have experienced a slight, steady increase in minority student enrollment during the past 12 years, the increase is not necessarily a sign of success, other leaders say.

Black enrollment has not kept pace with the increases in white enrollment, said Gary Cox, executive director of the council.

"I think we would have to say we're standing still," said John Frazer, executive director of the Council of Independent Kentucky Colleges and Universities. "And that means, in effect, that we're probably slipping backwards."

Kentucky is still ahead of the rest of the nation, though. The annual survey of the American Council on Education, released earlier this week, found that black college enrollments nationwide have significantly declined since the mid-1970s.

In contrast to U of L, both Kentucky State University and Western Kentucky University have dramatically lost black students since the 1970s.

There were small, consistent gains for Morehead State, Murray State and Northern Kentucky and for UK's 14 community colleges since 1978.

And at Eastern Kentucky University the black student population peaked slightly in the early 1980s before falling back to about 1970s levels, EKVU is slightly under its 1978 figure.

A shortage of funding may be preventing greater increases in black enrollment, some educators say.

"When state desegregation money was being distributed, we had very high black enrollment," said Howard Bailey, dean of student life at WKU, where black enrollment went down. "So we got very little money for black student recruitment and retention."

"Now we're out there trying to compete with those who got the big money — UK and U of L — and we're all trying to recruit the same students."

What has caused declines in black students at other universities has benefited U of L, according to Ralph Fitzpatrick, who coordinates minority affairs at the school.

Because many minority scholarship programs provide money only for tuition and sometimes for books, Fitzpatrick said, some Louisville residents might be choosing to attend U of L and live with their parents — one way to avoid the housing costs of regional universities.

U of L recruiters also have greater access to a many potential students because of Louisville's large black population, Fitzpatrick said.

'Buddy Program' keeps 'at risk' students in school

Jane consistently missed her second-grade classes last year at Maxwell Elementary.

When Donna Renfro, the school's community liaison, visited Jane's home, she found the cause of the problem.

"Jane's parents hadn't finished school," Renfro said. "They felt that there wasn't a need for Jane to go to school since the school system failed them."

In an effort to keep more students like Jane in school, Renfro developed the "Buddy System."

The program matches potential drop-out students with UK students. The student meets with the UK volunteer on a regular basis and discusses his or her progress in school.

About 100 UK students visited the school last spring, Renfro said.

"Some children (at the school) needed some attention," she said. "All children need someone to like them for just the way they are."

UK has been involved for several years in reaching out to "at-risk" students, according to Wayne Harvey, UK's director of educational services.

"At-risk" students are those whom educators say may drop out of school because of various socioeconomic factors, including family problems and poverty, Harvey said.

Renfro said that the "Buddy Program" has been a success in targeting potential drop-outs.

"Teachers have told me that the grades, attendance and overall attitude of the kids who have buddies visit them have improved," she said.

Although the Maxwell program was focused at first on children from low-income homes, it was expanded to include other students.

Carole Devine, Renfro's daughter, is a UK family studies graduate student and has been involved with the "Buddy Program" since its inception.

"I got so much satisfaction when Jessica (a sixth-grader) wrote me a letter thanking me for helping her with problems," Devine said.

Courier-Journal Editor David V. Hawpe said yesterday that "the First Amendment is an enormous grant of privilege."

But Hawpe said that a 1989 Supreme Court decision allowing censorship of high school newspapers causes him to be concerned about the future of the First Amendment.

Hawpe, a UK alumnus, addressed about 30 people for 45 minutes in the First Amendment Speaker Series before taking questions. His lecture, given in the Enoch Grehan Journalism Building's First Amendment Center, was titled "Why The First Amendment Is First."

The Supreme Court based the right of a principal to censor on

"reasonably related to legitimate pedagogical concerns," Hawpe said.

Hawpe, who was elected yesterday as the president of the Kentucky Press Association, said that the Student Press Law Center statistics show that requests for legal aid are higher since the court's decision.

The decision "has made a disturbing pattern," Hawpe said. "It is clear that the decision in the case has caused those who saw an opening in the First Amendment to move through that opening and exploit it in respect to student newspapers."

Hawpe said that 85 percent of the news in one high school paper in Washington state has to be "school-related or teen-age type activities."

"I am mystified over what 'teenage type' information is," said Hawpe, who has teen-agers of his own.

Hawpe also mentioned a Lexington high school paper, whose editorial urging teen-agers to be responsible in deciding about sex, was censored. "My experience is that no one has to condone sex for teens. They are fully able to do that themselves."

Hawpe said that while he was a staff member of the Kentucky Kernel during the 1960s, then-UK President John Oswald tried to censor the paper.

The Kernel did not become independent from the University until 1971.

"An attempt was made to remove me from the staff of the Kernel by Dr. John Oswald," Hawpe

UK's 'Carmen' to showcase renowned opera singer

Davidson to make local debut

By HUNTER HAYES
Assistant Arts Editor

The UK Opera Theatre will perform Georges Bizet's classic opera "Carmen," a tale of tragic love, at the Otis A. Singletary Center for the Arts this month. It will be the first time "Carmen" has been performed at UK.

The lead role of Carmen will be performed by the internationally renowned mezzo-soprano Diana Davidson.

"I haven't done this role for about 10 years," said Davidson, who is a Lexington native and a UK vocal instructor. "I've put it away. I do another role in the opera, which I've done in several opera companies in the United States, but I deliberately chose not to do Carmen until I got a little bit older. It's a hard role."

A lack of experience is not a problem for Davidson. Her other performance credits include roles in "The Barber Of Seville," "The Marriage of Figaro" and "Madame Butterfly."

Davidson received her formal training in opera at the Oberlin Conservatory in Ohio.

In addition to her adjunct duties at UK, Davidson also serves as part-time spokesperson for the Opera of Central Kentucky.

"I was approached by members of the community who wanted to start (the professional opera company)," Davidson said. "They asked me to help them. This was about a year and a half ago."

Although the Opera of Central Kentucky is separate from UK, Davidson said "they are very supportive of the work done at the University."

Davidson describes "Carmen" as a "tragic love story." It is the story of Carmen, a young gypsy, and another young girl who competes with Carmen for the affection of a soldier. The soldier, Don Jose, must compete with a Toreador named Escamillo for Carmen's heart.

Don Jose becomes intrigued with Carmen after rescuing her from being arrested for her role in a fight at a tobacco factory. Jose then deserts the army for Carmen and joins the gypsy way of life. According to Davidson, this now means that Jose has "lost all hope of joining normal society" by falling in with the gypsies.

This production of the dramatic opera contains an intercollegiate ensemble. The role of Don Jose is to be played by Perry Smith, a faculty member at Eastern Kentucky University, and Escamillo will be played by Wayne Gebb from Midway College.

Assistant musical director Phyllis Jenness said "Carmen" was brought to UK for several reasons.

"We do a major opera every year, and it's one that we wanted to do for some time," Jenness said. "Before we choose an opera we pretty well have to know that there are, at least, potential candidates for the leading roles. We had a very fine Carmen here in town and knew of the other roles. That's one factor.

Diana Davidson rehearses for the January 24th performance of Georges Bizet's "Carmen." The opera will have three performances at the Otis A. Singletary Center for the Arts.

Diana Davidson, a Lexington native, has performed with several opera companies, including the National Opera Company

The other is that "Carmen" is a very big choral opera and heretofore we have not been in a situation where we had a chorus. But now the University Choristers, under the direction of Roger Wesby, are going to function as the chorus."

Jenness added that "you can't do a big choral opera without a chorus so we have not done it before. I think it was that combination of factors that got us to do it. Of course we have to think a little bit about the box office and if there's any opera that's a household name, it's "Carmen."

Many people may avoid going to see operas because they are unfamiliar with the format and style of the performances, but Jenness has anticipated this. She will give a lecture before the Sunday matinee performance which will provide useful information on the production.

"It's a very practical lecture," Jenness said. "There will be nothing exotic — it's just to help people understand the opera and help them know what arias are coming up."

Everyone involved with "Carmen" hopes that it will attract many first-time opera patrons.

"It's worth checking out just out of curiosity," Davidson said. "It's a good opera to start with if you've never seen (an opera before)."

Davidson added: "I hope a lot of students at UK will come. It's an opportunity to see a live opera that you don't have very often. This is a very good experience."

"Carmen" will open Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. at the Otis A. Singletary Center for the Arts. Other performances will be held Jan. 26 at 7:30 and a Sunday matinee Jan. 28 at 2 p.m.

A lecture preceding the Sunday performance will be given at 1. Tickets are available at the Singletary Center ticket office for $8 regular and $6 for students and senior citizens. VIP tickets including a reception for the Jan. 26 performance are available for $25 and $50. For more information call the ticket office at 257-4929.

Gere changes with the times

By JULIE ROWLAND
Staff Writer

Richard Gere's mouth should be washed out with soap after "Internal Affairs." In this Henry Bean film where sex, sin and scandal run rampant, Gere's character leads in all three areas.

Gere plays a Los Angeles cop, Dennis Beck, whose partner is being investigated by the Internal Affairs Division of the police department. Andy Garcia is Raymond Avilla, who investigates the case with his lesbian partner.

Violence is a regular occurrence in the film. The males in the film bleed at least once, and so does the lesbian.

Homosexuality had a subtle vein throughout the film. In one scene, Gere strokes his partner's neck after Van has given his wife a black eye.

Gere is a human hormone in this film. When he is not sexually engaged with Van's wife, the wife of a man who hires him as a hit man, his ex-wife, his present wife, or Raymond's wife, what is he supposed to do?

Make crude jokes, or kill people. The movie's suspenseful scenes and interesting plotline are similar to a television cop movie except for the obscenities.

Though violent, the action of the movie was exciting. It is surprising to see Gere as a bad guy in a movie after his work in "An Officer and a Gentleman" and "No Mercy."

His evil role was a departure from his stereotype, proving he can play a diversity of characters. One ends up hating Gere's character by the end of the movie. Stirring up emotions, good or bad, is a favorable trait for a movie.

Garcia's character is apathetic throughout the film. In one scene Gere enters the elevator he's on and physically abuses Raymond and leaves him lying on the floor of the elevator in a fetal position.

Although not as muscular as Gere, Garcia could have put up stronger resistance. He just stands there and lets Gere pummel him.

Gere gives an example of an attractive actor that must change his range of acting as he gets older. Beck is a very different character from Gere's previous roles, and a vulgar one. With the high prices of going to the movies, this film would have more appeal as a television movie.

Rock 'n' Roll Hall of Fame holds induction ceremony

The Who, Simon & Garfunkel, The Kinks, Four Tops lead new inductees into hall

By MARY CAMPBELL

Paul Simon said he and Art Garfunkel would feel at home in the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, noting that their relationship was rocky.

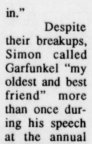

"We can join those other happy couples," he said at Wednesday night's induction ceremony. "Ike and Tina Turner, the Everly Brothers, Mick (Jagger) and Keith (Richards), Paul (McCartney) and all of the other Beatles."

"Maybe they'll have a separate wing for all of us, probably completed in time for the Eagles to be

Besides Ballard, and Simon and Garfunkel, the acts inducted were the Four Tops; the Who; Bobby Darin, who died in 1973, best known for "Splish Splash" and "Mack the Knife"; the Four Seasons; the Kinks; and the Platters.

One of the songwriting teams honored, Gerry Goffin and Carole King, created their first hit "Will You Love Me Tomorrow?" for the Shirelles, and followed it with "Up on the Roof," "Loco-motion" and "Go Away Little Girl."

Brothers Brian and Eddie Holland and Lamont Dozier, a creative cornerstone of the Motown sound of the 1960s and '70s, were honored for writing more than 70 Top 10 hits. Three of their 20 No. 1 hits were "Please Mr. Postman," "You Keep Me Hangin' on" and "Stop in the Name of Love."

Three performers inducted for their early influences on rock 'n' roll were Louis Armstrong, Charlie Christian and Ma Rainey.

Armstrong, who died in 1971, was a trumpeter and singer, and considered by some the greatest jazz musician of all time.

Christian, who died in 1942, was a jazz guitarist, the first to play hornlike, single-string solos on electric guitar.

Rainey, who died in 1939, recorded nearly 100 blues songs after 1923 and toured, popularizing the music.

Stevie Wonder, inducting the Four Tops, said: "If we could imagine ourselves as being the Four Tops and be able to come together with a sense of harmony and unity and make our own hits and do the right thing for 36 years, this country would truly be written in the sands of time forever."

"Obie, Lawrence, Duke, Levi — you truly are the sunshine of my life."

The irreverent Kinks wore tuxedos to be inducted.

"Seeing everybody makes me realize rock 'n' roll has become respectable," Ray Davies said. "What a bummer."

Dodd Darin, only child of the late Bobby Darin, accepted the induction of his father from Paul Anka.

"He was very much into rock 'n' roll," Anka said of Bobby Darin. "Because of him that form of music became much more acceptable to the listening public."

Wildcats hope to avoid the 'shockers' when they meet Tennessee tomorrow

By BARRY REEVES
Sports Editor

Before the season started, the Tennessee Volunteers, just like UK, was picked to finish in the lower half of the Southeastern Conference.

Tennessee had lost all five starters from last season, and this year they were entering the season with a new coach and seven freshmen.

But the Volunteers are proving a lot of the sages wrong.

Heading into tomorrow's 1:30 p.m. game against UK at Arena, the Volunteers are tied with LSU for first in the SEC with a 4-1 league record.

"They are the real shockers in the conference so far this season," UK forward Deron Feldhaus said. "I think they are lot like us because nobody really expected them to be very good."

"I knew they were going to be pretty good, but I had no idea that they would be in first place," Wildcat junior center Reggie Hanson said.

UK coach Rick Pitino isn't surprised with Tennessee's start.

UK-Tennessee

Records: UK 7-8 (3-3), Tennessee 9-5 (4-1).

When: 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

Where: Rupp Arena.

Radio: Live on WLK-AM/FM with Caywood Ledford and Dave Baker.

Television: Delayed on WKYT with Ralph Hacker and Jim Master.

"They had a lot of talent left over from last season," said Pitino, who's team is 7-8 overall and 3-3 in the SEC. "... They have a lot of good athletes. They can play athletically with any team in the conference."

UK senior guard Derrick Miller said: "I played against those guys last year and they have some good players coming back. (Greg) Bell and (Allan) Houston are very good players."

Bell, a 6-3 junior guard, leads the Volunteers in scoring with a 17.1 per game average. Houston, 1989 Kentucky Mr. Basketball, is second with a 16.5 average.

"They (Bell and Houston) both do a real good job for us," said first-year Tennessee coach Wade Houston, who also is Allan's father.

Because there was a void at the point guard position, Houston has been forced to use his son, a 6-5 freshman guard, at that position.

"(Allan) is one of the most valuable players on this team because of his ball handling," Houston said.

"We've been faced with a lot of good teams with good quickness... and he's done a real fine job of protecting the ball."

"He's better at the off-guard position, but he has the ball-handling skills we need."

Pitino has even more praise for Houston, who was named first team All-America by most publications as a senior at Louisville Ballard High School.

"I think he's a great player, with his best days ahead of him," he said. "I think if he keeps applying himself and working hard... he will have a bright future in basketball after college."

The main reason Houston was one of the highest recruited players out of high school last season was that he had very few holes in his game.

"He has a great ability to score and go to the basket and play defense and handle the ball," Pitino said. "He's just a complete basketball player."

Pitino said the Cats "don't match-up with anyone," but Tennessee's starting front line is smaller than his.

To counter UK's 6-7 front line of Hanson, Feldhaus and John Pelphrey, Tennessee probably start Ian Lockhart (6-8 senior center), Ronnie Reese (6-8 junior forward) and Steve Rivers (6-4 freshman forward).

"I don't know a whole lot about their front line except that they hit the boards really hard and they are also very quick," Hanson said. "And as usual, rebound will be a big key in the game. If we can control the boards, then I think we have a good chance of winning."

Lockhart is the leader on the interior and averages 12.8 points per game. His 10.8 rebound average a game is third in the SEC.

Reese, whose status is questionable for tomorrow's game because Wildcat guard Derrick Miller looks Alabama defenders off before passing to John Pelphrey, (not shown) who hit a three-pointer.

he suffered an ankle sprain in Wednesday's game at Florida, averages 10.6 points and 6.8 rebounds. Pitino said he believes that his team "will have to play with a great deal of emotion to beat Tennessee... When you play against a better team, you have to do that."

Funderburke says situation 'not a big deal'

By MIKE EMBRY
Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, Ky. — Former Indiana University forward Lawrence Funderburke said yesterday that attention about his departure from the Hoosiers in December has been "blown out of proportion" in recent weeks.

"It's not a big deal," he said at a news conference at St. Catharine College.

Funderburke left Indiana Dec. 14, after averaging 11.7 points in six games. He enrolled at St. Catharine, a junior college in central Kentucky with an enrollment of about 200, on Wednesday.

"Just playing-wise, it wasn't conducive to my plans," Funderburke said of staying at Indiana.

He said that Indiana coach Bob Knight had promised to release him from his national letter-of-intent a week after he left the school, but "now it doesn't look that way."

Funderburke said he was confused about Knight wanting to help him and other young people, but "he won't even give me a chance to go to school."

Funderburke has contacted Missouri and UK about transferring, but both schools referred him back to Indiana.

UK Athletics Director C.M. Newton and Coach Rick Pitino said Wednesday that Funderburke would not be playing basketball at UK.

"With as much as we depend on discipline in our program, if he can't play at Indiana, he can't play at Kentucky," Pitino said.

Funderburke said he selected St. Catharine because of its proximity to his home in Columbus, Ohio, and because he has several friends who live in Lexington, about 45 miles north of the rural campus.

"I guess he wanted to go somewhere he would be comfortable," said St. Catharine coach Jack Pack.

Funderburke abruptly ended the news conference after about 10 minutes.

"I think he's very tired of answering the same questions over and over," Pack said.

A few minutes later Funderburke was shooting baskets in the school's 200-seat gymnasium with several students.

Pack, whose team is 4-12 this season, said he would work with Funderburke to "try to get his life settled and start being a normal person. He needs to get a lot of confusion out of the way and become a normal teen-ager."

He said Funderburke would "abide by the same rules I have for other kids. You learn to do it the way it has to be done."

Funderburke transferred 15 credit hours to St. Catharine, according to Pack.

Pack said he told Funderburke this could be an opportunity to straighten out his life.

"I told him he's got to establish a reputation sooner or later — a positive lifestyle," Pack said. "It has been somewhat negative. I think he deserves a second chance."

But he added that while everything has gone smoothly since he first spoke to Funderburke on Monday, "that could change today or tomorrow."

Katfish head south to face highly ranked Florida

MICHAEL MUMFORD

Members of UK's men's and women's swim teams dive into the pool at the Harry A. Lancaster Aquatic Center. The Katfish and the Lady Katfish travel to the University of Florida for a meet this weekend.

By BRIAN JENT
Managing Editor

It will not be an easy task for the UK men's or women's swim teams to upset the University of Florida this weekend.

Both Florida teams are ranked in the Top 10 by the College Swimming Coaches' Association Polls and both feature swimmers who have competed on an international level.

UK competes against the Gators 7 p.m. tomorrow at the O'Connor Center Pool in Gainesville, Fla.

"It will definitely be an uphill battle, but we are hoping to go down there and swim up to our potential, so that we can get ready for (the Southeastern Conference Tournament)," UK assistant coach Jeff Bush said.

Both UK teams enter the meet at 5-3, 1-3 in the SEC, and have not swam a race since the Purdue Invitational, which was held before Christmas.

However, that does not discourage the swimmers. Instead, it gives them a little extra incentive, according to UK junior freestyler Brad Kales.

"(The break) will help us because we haven't had meet since the weekend of December, and we're real hungry to get out there and swim against people," he said. "We've been going against each other for the last month. This certainly gives us the opportunity to compete against a lot of people."

And also some of the best competition in the nation.

The fifth-ranked UF men's team are 5-2 on the season, 2-0 in the SEC. But the Katfish do not seem intimidated by Florida's ranking. Instead, they have a go-for-broke attitude.

"We are going in looking at it as a team," UK co-captain Jim McCarthy said. "We are not expected to win. We are just going to try to go down there and do the best we can. ... It's a good opportunity in that we just look at it as we got nothing to lose and as to swim

The Lady Gators are even better than the men. Favored to win the SEC, the Lady Gators are ranked No. 3 nationally with a 9-0 record, 3-0 in the SEC.

"I think we have a really good chance to perform better than we did last year," UK freshman butterflyer Wendy Hipskind said. "We are going to give them a run for their money, and they don't expect us to."

But before Florida can concentrate on the Katfish, they must swim against top-ranked ranked University of Texas at 3 p.m. in Austin.

"Hopefully, Texas will wear them out a little bit for us," Bush said with a smile.

However, in order, for the men's or women's team to win, everything must fall in place.

"It's going to take a perfect race from every single person," Bush said. "You are going to have to have people swimming right at NCAA level all the way through from top to bottom."

UK's players say they look at the Florida meet as a step towards the SEC Swimming and Diving Tournament, which begins Feb. 22 at the University of Alabama.

New Orleans is perfect host of the Super Bowl

By HAL BOCK
Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — Welcome to the biggest party in sports. The Super Bowl is a week of fun leading up to four hours of football.

And what better place to have a party than New Orleans?

This is the seventh time America's most-watched sporting event has settled in the Big Easy, and the memories of those games come more from what happened in the streets and bars and restaurants than what happened on the football field.

San Francisco and Denver players have a ton of distractions to take their mind off football.

This is the let-your-hair-down capital of the country. Y'all come. If you can't have fun here, well friend, you'd better check your pulse.

Start in the French Quarter with hot jazz and cool brews. Bring along an umbrella for the parade that breaks out when they play "When the Saints Go Marchin' In" at Preservation Hall. And the hurricanes at Pat O'Brien's will knock your socks off.

Hungry? How about some Cajun cuisine? There's blackened redfish at K-Paul's Kitchen and the not-to-be-missed barbecued shrimp at Pascal's Manale.

Prefer something more formal? Try the pecan trout at Commander's Palace or trout almonde at Antoine's.

Like some oysters? Brennan's prepares them in a variety of ways — Bienville with a cheese topping; Rockefeller with spinach and period; Roffignac with mushrooms.

ham and red wine. They are a culinary adventure for the most discriminating palate.

It's easy to break training in the Big Easy and hard not to.

The Super Bowl, that annual tribute to American excess, was made for this town and no city has hosted the event more often. Every one of the previous six has been a blowout, and often the game has been overshadowed by subplots.

The first time the NFL's winter carnival landed, in 1970, the big story was a report linking Kansas City quarterback Len Dawson to a nationwide gambling probe.

In weather so cold the fountains froze outside the team hotel, Dawson defended himself against the rumors. Then on Sunday in Tulane Stadium, he gave an MVP performance, passing the Chiefs to the championship, 23-7 over Minnesota — the beginning of the Vikings' four-game Super Bowl losing streak.

The last time the extravaganza visited, in 1986, it brought along two party animals — Jim McMahon and Refrigerator Perry of the Chicago Bears. McMahon got into all kinds of mischief, real and imagined. Perry concentrated on the cuisine — no difficult assignment in this setting.

Controversy preceded McMahon's arrival. He had been fined $5,000 for a unique fashion statement in the NFC championship game when he wore a headband that carried a sponsor's name.

The misdemeanor triggered all sorts of carrying-on in the Bears' camp during Super Bowl week, including a variety of new headband messages, some printable, some not.

Perhaps the most innovative was the one that said, "Hiroshi," McMahon's personal tribute to the Japanese acupuncturist who was rushed in from Chicago to treat the quarterback's sore hip.

How good a job did Hiroshi Shirashi do? Well, McMahon was parading through the French Quarter during the week, apparently feeling no pain. And during practice he demonstrated his ability to bend by mooning a low-flying helicopter. It was a Super Bowl first.

Then came l'affaire "sluts" when the quarterback was wrongly accused on television of slandering the town's female population. The result was a suspension for sportscaster Buddy Dillert and a new slogan for the headband merchants.

While all of this was going on, the 305-pound Perry was dining, mostly on oysters, most of them raw. "I start with a dozen," he said, "and see how it goes."

And which dining emporiums did the Refrigerator favor?

"I don't notice names," he reported. "I just browse."

Universities lack direction, educator says

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — College and university leaders should treat students as individuals and integrate academic life with the non-academic as a way to combat apathy, alcohol abuse and racial and ethnic conflicts, an educator said yesterday.

"What higher education needs today is not more rules, but a new post-in-locoparentis theory of campus governance, a set of agreed-upon standards to guide the conduct of all members of the community and give direction to the institution overall," said Ernest L. Boyer, president of The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching.

Boyer, addressing more than 1,200 higher education leaders at an American Council on Education meeting yesterday, suggested five principles that can "serve as a framework within which a vital community of learning can be built."

Colleges and universities must integrate the academic life with the non-academic, honor the "sacredness of the individual" and vigorously affirm equality of opportunity, he said. Freedom of speech must be uncompromisingly protected and civility "powerfully affirmed," he said.

Colleges and universities must have well-defined procedures that "guide behavior for the common good," as well as promote service and show support.

Boyer said he was troubled by a 1989 Carnegie survey that found student apathy, alcohol abuse and racial and ethnic divisions. Those things, he said, "weaken the vitality of many institutions."

"Administrators are understandably concerned about these problems. But they also are, we found, ambivalent about how they should respond," Boyer said.

The survey found that two-thirds of the professors interviewed believe their students are not academically well-prepared; more than 60 percent said they are teaching undergraduates what the students should have learned in high school; and 55 percent said undergraduates were "doing just enough to get by."

A separate study found 77 percent of students spent fewer than 16 hours every week in out-of-class study.

"This is hardly surprising since, according to the latest ACE data, three-fourths of today's students have a job and work, on average, 37 hours every week," Boyer said.

The survey found a "growing inclination among some students to use words ... as weapons of assault," Boyer said.

More than 60 percent of the presidents at research and doctoral institutions say sexual harassment is a problem and about half listed racial harassment as a problem, he said.

LEGISLATIVE BRIEFING

Ambitious education bill stalls

A bill to put a business start-up and assistance program in each of UK's 14 community colleges ran aground yesterday in the House Education Committee.

A vote on the bill was delayed at least for a week when some committee members called for inclusion of the state's regional universities and area vocational schools.

The bill proposed to duplicate at other community colleges the Business and Industry Technical Assistance Center operated by Hazard Community College since 1986.

The bill's co-sponsors — Reps. Jim Maggard, D-Jackson, and Jon David Reinhardt, R-Alexandria — said the Hazard program had been responsible for creating 220 jobs in 55 new businesses since its inception as a pilot program. Many of the program's participants were out-of-work coal miners in Eastern Kentucky, they said.

The bill called for funding of just under $1.3 million over the next biennium.

But the committee attached an amendment by Rep. Walter Bevins, D-Morehead, to enhance similar programs at the regional universities. Rep. Clayton Little, D-Virgie, said he would try to have vocational schools included.

Bill would bar students from carrying pagers

The House Education Committee also approved a bill would bar students from carrying electronic pagers or beepers in school. The sponsor, Rep. Denver Butler (D-Louisville), said the devices were being used to signal drug deliveries.

The bill would exempt students who were volunteer firefighters or emergency medical technicians.

Anti-smoking bill likely up in smoke

A bill to prohibit elementary and secondary students from using tobacco at school will probably go up in smoke. The Kentucky House Agriculture and Small Business Committee will take up the measure again next Tuesday after hearing 45 minutes of testimony related to the bill Wednesday.

None of the committee members, many of whom represent tobacco-producing areas or are themselves farmers, directly argued for allowing children to smoke.

Instead, they criticized the bill for allowing teachers to smoke while prohibiting the children from smoking, for not including younger college students in the ban and for taking the decision away from local school boards.

In 1988, when a law was passed allowing smoking areas for students, about 96 of the approximately 174 school districts in the state did just that. The others banned student smoking.

Doctors and representatives of national and state health organizations lauded the bill, sponsored by Rep. Tom Burch, D-Fern Creek. They cited surveys that show 73 percent of Kentuckians favor such a ban and research that shows that cigarette smoking can lead to illegal drug use.

Senate passes King bill

Descendants of slaves and slaveowners preached the importance of Martin Luther King Jr.'s crusade for racial harmony to the Senate, which passed a bill yesterday to make King's birthday a state holiday.

The civil rights leader was praised by longtime admirer Sen. Gerald Neal, D-Louisville — the only black member of the Senate — and Sen. Walter Baker, R-Glasgow, the descendant of slaveowners in Southern Kentucky.

In a moving speech, Baker said he was wrong when he thought King's civil-rights crusade in the 1950s and 1960s was pushing for too much too soon.

"He was able to carry us forward non-violently to a state where we are hopefully achieving equal rights for all citizens," Baker said.

Senate Bill 2, if enacted, would designate the third Monday of each January as a state holiday in which most of the state's approximately 40,000 workers would have the day off.

The Senate passed the bill on a 36-0 vote. The House already has passed identical legislation.

Neal, a descendant of slaves, said lawmakers rarely have a chance to consider a bill "that is so right and so deserving of passage."

Morning Bible class at school could be canceled

Associated Press

STANTON, Ky. — A Bible study class is being held before class at the Powell County High School, but the sessions may become a thing of the past because of a case pending before the U.S. Supreme Court.

About 20 Powell County high school students gather each morning before school in Classroom No. 9 for a 10-minute Bible lesson and prayer time. Participation in the class, called the "Upper Room," is voluntary.

But a case involving prayer in a Nebraska high school could halt the Upper Room sessions, Powell County school officials said.

The Supreme Court court heard an appeal Jan. 9 by Omaha Westside High School in which officials argued allowing that a Bible study group to meet at the school after classes violates the constitutionally required separation between church and state.

By accepting the case, justices agreed to review a 1984 federal law requiring student religious groups to receive the same access as other extra-curricular clubs to public high school facilities. A decision in the case is expected by July.

The controversy over religion in the schools is "that age-old question," said Powell County High School Principal Lonnie Morris.

High school teacher Marie Fain, who coordinates Upper Room meetings, said the court won't find anything wrong with the religious meetings.

"It befuddles me that a minority can say what we can and can't do," Fain told the Clay City Times this week. "But if they say we have to stop, we'll stop."

Powell County School Superintendent Jim Potts said the issue before the court might affect more than the Upper Room.

Eugene Rule, minister at the Stanton Presbyterian Church, makes visits "from time to time" to Powell County schools for Bible reading and study.

"It's strictly on a volunteer basis. The students don't have to go if they don't want," said Potts. "We would continue the practice until the court stops us. I would hate to see us not to be able to allow students to go there for the fellowship and camaraderie that they get there."

In the Nebraska case, school officials were concerned that the issue may become more than a question of separation between church and state.

Training memory will help more than cramming

Dear Counselor: My memory is terrible! I have to spend hours and hours going over my notes and reading assignment in order for them to sink in. A lot of school seems to be memory work! Is there anything I can do to memorize things better? Help! Liz, business freshman.

Counselor's CORNER

the material until you know it by heart." That method does work, but it can be highly inefficient because of the amount of time required.

In his book Becoming A Master Student, David Ellis discusses 12 memory techniques to develop a more efficient memory.

The techniques are not meant to be restrictive, but should be used in different combinations and adapted to meet your learning situations. If you consistently use these techniques the results may surprise you!

LEARN FROM THE GENERAL TO THE SPECIFIC. Get familiar with the "big picture" by first skimming and surveying, and then get more specific. This process assists your brain in organizing the information for more efficient recall.

MAKE IT MEANINGFUL. Relate the subject you are learning to what you want from your education and to your long-term goals. By specifically analyzing what the material can mean for you, the process of memorization can become less tedious.

CREATE ASSOCIATIONS. Memory is association! What we know now is based on information we have already learned. Link new information with old information by using creative acronyms and mnemonic devices.

LEARN IT ONCE ACTIVELY. Many people "forget" information because they never learned it in the first place. Pay attention, concentrate and actively (recite, gesture, etc.) participate in learning the material.

VISUALIZE RELATIONSHIPS. Vividly imagine what you have to remember by creating mental "pictures" of the material and relate them to each other. Turn abstract ideas into concrete examples.

RECITE AND REPEAT. Of the 12 techniques, this is the one most frequently used by most people. By reciting, you "anchor" the material via two different senses — talking and hearing.

REDUCE INTERFERENCE. Avoid distraction! Your study environment and habits may be draining your energy to concentrate — turn off the TV, take frequent breaks, padlock the refrigerator.

OVERLEARN. Immerse yourself in the subject to fight mental "fuzziness." By learning it inside and out (not just enough to pass the test), you can better apply the knowledge in problem-solving situations.

BE AWARE OF ATTITUDES. Take responsibility for your attitudes — they can affect your ability to recall information. For example, viewing a subject as boring can affect your concentration and attention span.

DISTRIBUTE LEARNING. Break up marathon study sessions into shorter segments spaced over a longer period of time. You avoid cramming, which is analogous to training for a marathon the day before the race — it's not very effective. By distributing your learning you will retain more information.

REMEMBER SOMETHING ELSE. If you get stuck and can't remember an item, think of something that is related to that item. Many times the association process will "jog" your memory. This is also the concept behind brainstorming.

COMBINE MEMORY TECHNIQUES. Use what works! Combine techniques to maximize retention. Experiment for yourself.

Liz, this should give you a good start in developing your memory.

However, if you are interested in learning more about improving your memory or other study skills such as time management, textbook reading, note taking and test taking, consider talking with a skills counselor at the Counseling and Testing Center or enrolling in the Master Student Program. Either of these options will be a good investment in your academic success.

Students who wish to address these issues can come by the UK Counseling and Testing Center, 301 Fraze Hall, or call 257-3701. If you have a problem you would like addressed in write: "Counselor's Corner"; 301 Fraze Hall; UK; Lexington, Ky. 40506-0031.

Dear Liz: You are correct in your observation that memory is a key element to being a successful student.

Although many college courses concentrate on more advanced thinking skills, such as application and synthesis of knowledge, memory still plays a key role in making these processes more effective. Let's take a look at a key concept related to memory.

One way to approach memory is to realize that no one really has a "bad" memory. It is either trained or untained.

Most of us have never had formal training on how to remember. About the only advice we ever received was, "Well, read and recite

Letters

UK should explain fee

After reading several letters to the editor concerning the University's plan to charge international students an additional fee of $50 a semester, my curiosity peaked. I decided to talk with several of the international students to find out exactly why the additional fee was being charged and what were the added benefits received for the extra fee paid. When I started seeing that these students did not know fully what benefits they were receiving from their original fees, my curiosity grew more.

It was not my task to satisfy my curiosity but maybe ask a few questions in order for someone to answer what seems to be a lack of understanding in the community of our foreign brothers and sisters.

The questions are as follows:

Why, in detail, was the increase?

Are there any little known or rarely used programs that could be cut instead of the fee increase?

Are there any duplication of services?

Are there other alternatives that might have been overlooked?

I would like to say in conclusion, it is not my goal to criticize any program that I'm this unfamiliar with. On the other hand, I believe it should be the goal of the international students to criticize this program if they are unfamiliar with it. My belief it should be the responsibility of the University to inform, in detail, the foreign students not just provide them with general information.

Loss of friend can be hard

Tommy Geobegan was a person I enjoyed talking to and being with. He always left me in better spirits after our visits. I might have seen him three times in a week or go a month before seeing him, but when we got together we'd catch up on the news and share many laughs.

That's what I'll remember most, our light hearted banter, laughing about this or that. I'd give him a good natured hard time about his love life, reminding him that helping a girl with her homework was not a romance. He would think for a second and laugh. He could laugh at himself and my jokes, talents which I've found not everyone has.

I have asked why this happened to one of my friends, why I have to be sad. I'm not really sorry so much for Tommy as I am for myself, now my stay in Lexington will be more lonely.
