THE SAME OLD STORY

Repeatedly, students have called attention to the fact that the campus walks are in a most deplorable condition. Repeatedly, The Kernel has made pleas for better walks, pointing out the obvious defects of the present system. The only reply that anyone has received is that the walks will gradually become traversable if students will only be patient and walk on them. Authorities state that the "improvements," which, instead of remedying past defects have created more, are the only ones available within the university budget.

The student body has given its answer to the problem. New pathways running parallel to the original walks have been created. The lawn is worn with shoe cuts, there is no grass on either side of the campus walks. Although the general appearance of the campus has been ruined we are not sorry that this has happened because the student body has earned the right to tolerate existing conditions and has found them unbearable.

The matter of expense necessarily must be taken into consideration in making allowances for that. The Kernel maintains its stand of falling to understand in what way the university has profited by keeping these walks. Furthermore, as far as we can see, we think that if the gravel were raked off of the walks and the original dirt walks were left that the campus would be in much better condition than it is today. We would not mind sliding through the clay on a rainy day any more than we mind wading through mud holes, twisting our ankles, bruising our feet and ruining our shoes on these gravel walks. In fact, it would be a pleasure!

Students receive the brunt of the expense of the upkeep of these walks. The university has only had the expense of putting them down. Taking into consideration the present conditions, it is impossible for a student to wear a pair of shoes for over two weeks without having new heel caps put on them; each pair of heel caps cost the student twenty-five cents. These are over three thousand students attending this university, making a very conservative estimate, deducting two hundred dollars for those who have cars and are accustomed to riding from class to class, the gravel walks cost the student body five hundred and fifty dollars every two weeks—two hundred and twenty-five dollars a week, or one thousand one hundred dollars a month! This is why we do not condemn the students for their direct disobedience of university laws in walking on the grass or making new campus paths. No fair minded person could blame them for rebelling against gravel walks which cost them one thousand and one hundred dollars a month.

The Kernel hopes that authorities will take this matter into consideration and try to find some logical solution for the problem. If the expense of a gravel roller is too much we would suggest employing students who need work to rake the excess gravel off of the walks. In the future, unless some attempt is made to answer the students' pleas for better walks, we

HEREDITY AND CHEATING

An ideal attitude regarding the problem of cheating is taken by Dr. W. D. Funkhouser. He has an individual philosophy on the subject which is worth while from the student viewpoint as well as from the faculty outlook. Doctor Funkhouser, in discussing the matter, mentions the fact that it is seldom that students manage to fool the professors, that they too went to college and were surrounded by similar conditions and so know for what to look. However, he does not seem to take that familiar attitude, so common to the majority of professors, of very sanctimoniously warning the class of what he will do to them, following it with a dissertation upon the evils of taking someone else's work, then with a speech titled "Of Course I Trust You," and then when the final examination rolls around, patrolling the class which has been spread at least three seats apart, and given alternate sets of questions.

Doctor Funkhouser has a novel way of making the student feel ashamed to cheat. He does not lay the blame on you but on your family, states that there is a criminal streak in your character, if not in you, then in your family, they are common to your kin. We think that this is the most logical piece of classroom reasoning on the matter of cheating on examinations that we have had the opportunity to hear. Any person who, in the face of such reasoning, which his courses definitely proves to be as near perfect as any tested and retested chemistry experiment, could have the nerve to cheat is beyond our conception.

Heretofore, the average student reasoning on the matter of cribbing on examinations has been that he is the only one who is responsible for it; that he is to blame; that his is the entire responsibility. In this way they seem to save their conscience. If they have any, and to arrive at the conclusion that it really does not matter anyway. Looking at it from Doctor Funkhouser's viewpoint it is merely a symbol of poor family, inherited weakness of character, and a characteristic which will go down in the families of the individuals who practice it as a minor criminal tendency. Who, after all, wants to admit that his family is inferior; that it is weak; that his children will have weak characters? What could be a more logical course of reasoning than to present these factors to the student for consideration in order to make him realize that he was not the only one to be taken into account for his cheating?

FACULTY CLUB

Starting with the express object of promoting social relations among its members, the University of Kentucky club has more than achieved that aim. Now, with almost 2000 members enrolled and with "the Faculty Club rooms" maintained to the mutual profit of faculty and university, the club is becoming established as an institution on the campus.

The activities of the club consist of parties, teas, and informal gatherings designed to bring faculty members and their wives, children, or sweethearts, together. All members of the university assembly and graduate assistants are eligible to membership in the club, and may remain members and enjoy the use of the club rooms as long as they pay their dues and observe the by-laws of the club.

The club rooms are on the top floor of McVey hall and were provided by the university, and were furnished half by the club and half by the university. The lounge room is used for reading, conversation, and writing. The game room is available for such games as cards, chess and checkers. The committee room is used as a committee meeting room and lunch room. It is in these rooms, beautifully and informally furnished, and provided with books, magazines, and games, that the university staff members gather for good times. Every Sunday afternoon a tea is held for club members, their friends and visitors to the college. Two or three times during each semester parties are given. On occasional Saturday nights a half dozen or more members or guests gather for open house in the club rooms and dance, or play cards with congenial companions.

This opportunity for faculty members of the university to become acquainted with each other is invaluable. In no other organization, church, luncheon club, political meeting, are the members thrown together in such a sincerely informal way. Every member of the club finds some amusement he likes whether it be card playing, dancing, reading, talking, or loafing, and he finds a congenial soul who likes to do the same thing, too. New projects are conceived and new friendships born in the lounging room. Weary teachers find chance half hours of leisure here away from their offices and return to work refreshed, for the club rooms are also kept open during the day for friends and members. The Faculty club and the club rooms are worthy enterprises which should be taken advantage of by everyone who

Kentucky Medical Association to Meet At U. K. in September

The Kentucky Medical Association will hold its eighty-first annual meeting at the university, September 7 to 10.

The committee in charge of arrangements is composed of Dr. L. C. Redmon, chairman; Dr. Charles A. Vance, Dr. J. S. Chambers, Dr. Charles Carr, and Dr. T. A. Ray, president of the Fayette County Medical Society. Dr. W. B. McClure, of Lexington, is president of the state association.

Physicians and surgeons from all sections of the state are making reception and entertainment plans in addition to the arrangements for the business session. The women's auxiliary will meet in McVey hall. General meetings will be held in other buildings on the campus. Accommodations in the men's dormitories and at the University Commons will be open to these meetings.

LEXINGTON DAY

The first invitation ever extended to citizens of Lexington to visit the university has been issued and Thursday, May 28 townspeople will be the guests of this institution. The inception of a day which is set aside for the people of Lexington, when it is possible for them to visit the various departments of the institution and to learn the processes by which students here receive their educations, cannot but prove beneficial.

Many persons seem to believe that one of the most important features of college life is a small and friendly town in which the educational institution exists. Relations between the citizens of Lexington and students at the university have never been as agreeable as they should have been and The Kernel believes that townspeople and undergraduates have never had a proper understanding of each other. This perhaps largely is due to the fact that there has never been any real opportunity for the students and the citizens to meet on the same ground and thus to gain a more clarified and intellectual mutual understanding.

It is the hope of both authorities and students at the university that Lexington Day will prove an outstanding success; that the people of Lexington who visit our institution May 28 will be more whole-heartedly cooperative with future undertakings of the university; that we, as students here, may do our part to make our visitors agree with us in our belief that we have one of the most progressive and efficient of modern universities.

I thought it was spring that I loved,
Spring, and white blossoms gay,
Cherry blooms that fill my heart
With pain and ecstasy,
I thought it was night that I loved,
Night and the great white way,
The moon, the good of lovers
That I loved to watch always.

But it was not these things, my love,
That within my heart held sway,
But the sweet thought of you, dear heart,
That has kept and will keep me your slave.

BRADLEY KINCAID TO APPEAR IN KENTUCKY THEATRE
Famous Kentuckian To Sing Daily Starting Wednesday

Bradley Kincaid of station WLW will appear in person at the Kentucky on next Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday to sing his favorite old time songs and mountain ballads that have made a sensational radio "hit."
WLW executives say that no radio entertainer ever has had such success as a ballad singer as Bradley Kincaid. He went to station WLW for the month of January to see if he would be as popular as he has been for the past four years at station WLS in Chicago. In those four weeks he received 50,000 letters from WLW listeners. This induced him to sign a contract with station WLW to broadcast several times daily, and to appear in theaters under the management of the Crowley Artists Bureau.
He is a real Kentuckian, born in Garrard county in the edge of the Cumberland mountains just beyond the Bluegrass section of Kentucky. He left the state only when he went to work for the U. S. Navy, but he went back to it after the war and stayed there five years more before he went to Chicago to get college.
The songs Bradley Kincaid sings to the accompaniment of his "hound dawg" guitar are a part of his heritage and were handed down to him by word of mouth from generations of Kentuckians before him. Some of them never were written down until he put them in book form to satisfy the demand of his radio audience.
That "hound dawg" guitar he mentions so often on the air is one of his most prized possessions. Bradley's father was a great fox hunter, and used to go home after a hard day in the fields, snatch a bit of supper, get his old fox horn from behind the door, blow up his two fox hounds, and ride away to the hills for a night of hunting.
On one of these expeditions, he traded one of his fox hounds to a negro for a discontinued guitar. After that, the Kincaid family always referred to the instrument as the "hound dawg" guitar. All the ten Kincaid children learned to pick away on it, but Bradley was the most proficient at playing it, and it ultimately came to be regarded as his private property. He would sit by hours singing the old ballads he had heard his father and mother and their neighbors sing. Little did he dream that some day they would bring him fame and fortune.
The feature picture attraction during Kincaid's engagements will be "Baby Company," and "J. C. Smead in 'Various R. Hand.'"

W. A. A. to Hold Annual River Camp

The Woman's Athletic Association will hold its annual spring week-end camp this Saturday and Sunday, May 23 and 24, on the Kentucky River. Frances Barker, president of the organization, and Dorothy Gould, hiking and camping manager are in charge of arrangements, and Miss Rebecca Averill, director of physical education, will be the official chaperone.
Buses will leave the area between Patterson and Boyd halls at 12:30 o'clock Saturday and will return about 3:30 Sunday afternoon. The entire fee for the week-end is $1.50. This covers transportation, room, and meals. Any woman in the university is eligible to attend, and reservations may be made by signing the poster in Boyd hall and paying the fee to Dorothy Gould before 7:30 p. m. Friday.
Swimming, boating, and other outdoor recreations as well as indoor games will be played. The purpose of the camp is not instructional but is a mere get-together of those persons who are interested in athletics and who desire to spend a week-end on the river.

A HEALTH TIP

The Phi Psi Phi fraternity entertained with a dinner at the Teapoo Inn Friday evening for the pledges. The pledges are W. C. Windland, John Batman, Earl Robinson, John Haron, William Osborne, and T. J. McDowell.
