INITIATIVE

Program aims to restore East End

President Lee Todd addresses the crowd at the opening ceremony of the Community Outreach Partnership Center Friday.

Outreach: UK's commitment to community part of neighborhood revitalization project

By John Wampler
NEWS EDITOR

Residents of Lexington's East End say the area has been neglected for a long time, and hope a $400,000 community outreach initiative involving UK will help change that.

The initiative, announced Friday, combines cooperation between UK, residents and more than 22 community organizations and government agencies. It aims at helping address family, educational, housing and neighborhood revitalization in the East End.

"This is what needs to happen to this area," said Betty Wilson, a second year social work student at LCC who lived in the East End all her life.

Wilson will serve as one of the initiative's "outreach specialists," a resident who will work with people in the East End, discuss their problems and give feedback to others in the program.

"You can't come in and tell people what they need," Wilson explained. "The people have to tell others."

The initiative focuses on the creation of the new Community Outreach Partnership Center, which will be based at the YWCA Phyllis Wheatley Center on Chestnut Street.

Retia Walker, dean of the School of Human Environmental Sciences, said that the process began in 1999 when Jerry Bramwell, former UK vice president, brought a group of deans and representatives from the community together to discuss how UK could get more engaged in the community.

A proposal was twice denied by the Department of Housing and Urban Development. HUDD accepted the second revision of the proposal and provided $400,000 to start the project.

Helping the community

The East End Community Outreach Partnership Center will offer these programs to help residents address issues:

- Community-Family Resource: Will create six Village Exchange Groups to share skills toward self-sufficiency
- Family Educational Resource: To help families bridge gaps between home and school, such as improving student performance and decreasing dropout rates
- Housing Revitalization: To help residents improve housing conditions, address tenant issues and increase opportunities for home ownership
- Neighborhood Revitalization: To promote business development in the area, provide small business training and promote clean-up projects

Room makes math more colorful

Crunching numbers: New center provides better atmosphere, equipment to study

By Kristin Durbin
STAFF WRITER

In the past, students may only have ventured into the basement of Whitehall Classroom Building to mail a letter or buy stamps.

Now, after months of renovations, UK faculty and staff have transformed a formerly drab room with white walls and broken desks into a smart new facility for students to study math.

Funky colors, math puzzles and cozy chairs are only the beginning in Mathskeller, designed by Mark Denomme of Information Systems. The room also has computers, wireless Internet and math software.

Bryan Perdue, a marketing and finance junior, said he spends hours at the Mathskeller.

"You don't feel like you're in the basement," he said.

Carl Eberhart, a math professor, said the math department has needed a resource center for a long time. He said the new Mathskeller is more than a computer lab.

"It's a good place to hang out," Eberhart said.

Students can take breaks during long study sessions at the coffee bar, which includes a microwave and refrigerator.

Eberhart said students can even print math assignments for free. He said this perk would continue so long as the service is not abused.

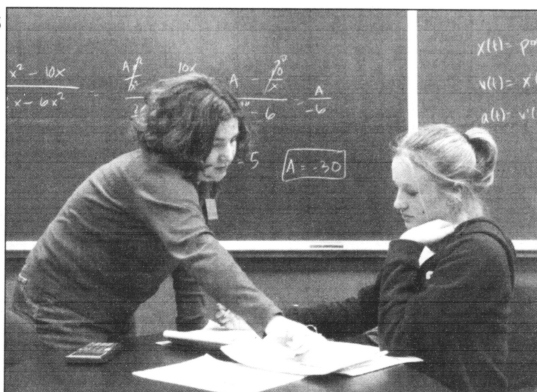

Paul Eakin, a professor of math, said Mathskeller's main benefit is the atmosphere for learning. He said group work is helpful to mathematicians. Students can reserve a study room for this purpose.

"Mathematicians learn math primarily through sharing their knowledge and working for deeper understanding with colleagues," Eakin said.

George Landon, a computer science senior, said his professor made him work in either the Mathskeller or the older math computer lab.

"I prefer the Mathskeller," he said. "It's good for group work."

The grand opening two weeks ago had President Lee

Kathy Sharrow (left), a math department tutor, and Jenae Duff, an animal sciences freshman, work together at Mathskeller, a new lab in the basement of the Classroom Building designed to help students develop their numbers skills. The bright, attractive center has a coffee bar and free printing.

Todd excited as well. As the formalities ended and guests dispersed, Betty Griffin, of Math Sciences Computing, noticed something.

"Todd had stuck around," Griffin said. "He was helping students with homework."

Those who didn't get help from the president can attend tutoring sessions or ask professors who work there.

Eakin said Mathskeller was created so students could study and learn, as mathematicians should.

"Space, food, accessibility, convenience, interesting distractions, technology and information are among the requirements we set before Mark (Denomme)," Eakin said. "He provided all of them and more."

President says he won't take possible bonus

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LEXINGTON — President Lee Todd said he wouldn't accept a possible $100,000 performance bonus at the end of his first year, because of the school's tight budget.

"I'm not going to take it," Todd told the Lexington Herald-Leader. "In tight budget years, it's not the right time to do it."

The bonus is part of Todd's five-year contract, which started July 1, 2001. It offered a bonus on top of his $265,000 annual salary, if he met certain performance goals his first year. Todd replaced Charles T. Wethington.

But state budget restrictions recently cut $6 million out of this year's funding, and the cut is recurring, meaning UK stands to lose $18 million by the end of the next two-year budget cycle.

The Board of Trustees applauded Todd's decision.

"To make that kind of statement shows the caliber of person that he is," said Lays Mather, a faculty trustee.

"If faculty and staff are not going to get a raise, he's not comfortable with one either. It's a very positive statement about the concern he has for employees of the university."

Todd said he's hoping to find enough money so that employees won't have to bear the burden of increased health insurance costs, which Todd estimated could reach $5 million.

Study says students most liberal since mid-70s

Leaning left: Report also finds trends toward interracial socializing, support for marijuana legalization and aversion to organized religion

After a steady decline in the early 90s, a recent report by UCLA's Higher Education Research Institute revealed that liberalism is gaining renewed popularity on college campuses.

The American Freshman Survey, conducted annually since 1966, found that nearly 30 percent of first year students consider themselves liberal, an increase from 27 percent last year, and the highest number since the fall of 1975.

Many students say they have noticed the more liberal atmosphere on campus, especially among undergraduates.

"I think it's a time where they're simply more liberal because they have more freedom," said Darnell Anderson, an undeclared sophomore.

The labels conservative and liberal by themselves can be misleading, said Stephen Voss, an associate professor of political science.

"The problem is this liberal and conservative label is an artificial construct that mostly describes politicians and not ordinary persons," Voss said.

Former director talks about violations

C.M. Newton, the former athletic director, accepted some responsibility for the football rules violations that got the Wildcats three years' probation last week. Newton said Saturday he was "angry" and "embarrassed" by the dozens of recruiting improprieties unearthed by internal and NCAA investigations. Newton retired as Kentucky's athletic director on June 30, 2000. The NCAA announced Thursday that more than three dozen violations were committed by the football program from 1998 to 2000, including academic fraud, impermissible recruiting contacts and gifts of cash, apparel, lodging and meals to prospects and high school coaches. "First of all, I'm embarrassed personally," Newton said at Rupp Arena before Kentucky's 91-74 basketball victory over South Carolina.

LEXINGTON — A 64-year-old Lexington man who was under investigation in a child pornography case shot himself to death in his home after a 14-hour standoff with police. Officers had gone to the home of George James Magnett early Friday morning to execute a search warrant for evidence of child pornography. Magnett was held up in the home until about 2:30 p.m., when officers burst into the home and found Magnett dead of a gunshot wound.

Tobacco growers face small quota cuts

LOUISVILLE — The burley tobacco quota will decline 6.5 percent to 344 million pounds this year, the U.S. Department of Agriculture announced Friday. Despite the decrease from 368 million pounds last year, growers won't be facing the sizable cuts of recent years that have slashed the quota by almost half across the eight-state burley growing belt, including Kentucky. The quota is the amount of tobacco that farmers are permitted to grow. Garrard County farmer Henry West, president of the Burley Tobacco Growers Cooperative Association in Lexington, said the 6.5 percent decrease is far from bad news.

American actor Richard Gere will make a cameo appearance in Germany's parliament in April to discuss human rights in the Himalayan region, a spokesman for the Reichstag said Sunday. The parliament's human rights committee said that Gere, 52, had been invited for a hearing on April 17 because of his extensive knowledge of Tibet. Gere, a devoted Buddhist, has used his celebrity status to promote Tibetan independence and his friend and teacher, the Dalai Lama. The actor has urged the U.N. Commission on Human Rights to condemn China for alleged religious and cultural repression in the Himalayan region.

Human rights activists including the Dalai Lama have long lobbied for autonomy in Tibet, which China annexed in the 1950s. Tibet's spiritual leader, the Dalai Lama, fled into exile in India in 1959 after a failed revolt against Chinese rule.

Enron exec to testify before Congress

WASHINGTON — It's not just his company that is weighed with debts. Kenneth Lay's credibility is now a liability on his personal balance sheet. Once a man with intimate access to Washington policy-makers, the former chairman of Enron Corp. appears before Congress on Monday as a business titan condemned by former employees and investors. They lost millions before the energy company entered bankruptcy Dec. 2. Until then, he was the father figure of the nation's seventh-largest company. Now, ex-Enron employees are selling T-shirts printed with the message: "Enron, the corporation that stole Christmas." Politicians from President Bush on down who welcomed Lay's generous political donations now keep a wide distance.

Reporter still alive, newspaper says

KARACHI, Pakistan — The Wall Street Journal appealed Saturday to the kidnappers of reporter Daniel Pearl to show evidence that he is still alive after an all-night search of Karachi graveyards turned up nothing. Pearl's wife and an American Muslim group issued separate appeals for his release, and e-mails purportedly sent Saturday by the kidnappers gave conflicting accounts of his fate. An e-mail received Friday by U.S. news organizations claimed Pearl, 38, had been killed and his body dumped in an unspecified cemetery in this city of 12 million people.

A brief in Thursday's Kernel should have said that members of the President's Commission on Women will be holding a forum on Tuesday.

A graphic in Friday's Kernel incorrectly stated the amount of former head football coach Hal Mumme's contract buyout. The buyout is $1 million.

A graphic in Friday's Kernel concerning visitation policies was inconsistent with its headline. Morehead State University does not have a 24-hour visitation policy.

World forum addresses global issues

Seeking peace: Israeli-Palestinian conflict one of main subjects discussed by attendees

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said he saw "a ray of hope" for Mideast peace Sunday, as the World Economic Forum focused on resolving long-standing global conflicts.

The 16-month Israeli-Palestinian fighting took the spotlight at a panel which was supposed to be devoted to future political and economic trends likely to shape the world.

Participants at another session on the forum's fourth day talked about how to move the stalled Northern Ireland peace process forward.

Peres welcomed an opinion piece by Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat in Sunday's New York Times, saying it marked the first time he indicated a readiness to discuss key issues and expressed determination "to put an end" to the activities of terrorist organizations attacking Israeli civilians.

"I believe that despite all the very pessimistic views, there is also a ray of hope," he said.

New talks with the Palestinians could lead to a cease-fire, Israeli recognition of a Palestinian state and Palestinian recognition of Israel's right to exist, Peres said. And eventually a final settlement could be reached on the most contentious issues of borders, refugees, settlements and Jerusalem, he added.

"The plan that we are now discussing is the war, then recognize immediately the establishment of a Palestinian state," Peres said, but he added that Arafat must first stop suicide attacks on Israelis.

In Israel on Sunday, Prime Minister Ariel Sharon announced he would continue cease-fire talks begun last week with the Palestinians.

But some critics interpreted the comments by Sharon and Arafat largely as public relations efforts by a pair of leaders facing mounting difficulties.

Israel has confined Arafat to the West Bank town of Ramallah for the past two months, and the United States has demanded that the Palestinian leader do more to crack down on militants.

At the forum, U.S. Sen. Hillary Clinton, D-New York, said the United States "remains not only an honest broker but an essential broker." But she said the Bush administration is not doing enough to push the process forward.

Former U.S. national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski echoed Clinton's assessment, saying the United States has pursued a policy of being "a very cautious mediator" and hasn't gotten to "the heart of the problem."

About 2,700 participants at the five-day economic forum — ranging from corporate leaders to celebrities — are discussing U.S. foreign policy, its possible role in breeding terrorism and the down side of globalization. The topics are ample fodder for protesters, who continued the demonstrations with a march supporting animal rights Sunday afternoon.

The panel on Northern Ireland included George Mitchell, a former U.S. senator who helped broker a historic 1998 peace agreement, David Trimble, leader of Northern Ireland's power-sharing government, and Gerry Adams, leader of Sinn Fein, the political party linked to the Irish Republican Army.

Sunday's round of demonstrations against the forum was expected to produce a much lighter turnout than the demonstrations Saturday, which attracted as many as 7,000 people.

About 70 people were taken into custody on disorderly conduct charges Sunday afternoon after they blocked traffic in Manhattan, 3 1/2 miles from the Waldorf-Astoria hotel where the conference is taking place.

Police stopped about 200 protesters with the Earth and Animal Liberation group from marching toward the Waldorf later Sunday afternoon after some protesters smashed a glass door and threw a red-paint filled balloon at an apartment building about a mile from the forum.

It was not immediately clear whether any arrests were made.

Other findings of the survey suggest an increase in interracial socializing, a movement away from organized religion and more support for the legalization of marijuana.

"The issues on which certain undergraduates have become more liberal are all personal liberty issues," Voss said. "Today's students have a strong belief in autonomy."

The survey also revealed that more students than ever, 47 percent, said they have participated in an organized demonstration in the past year, three

Positions offer chance to become a leader

Experience: Dean of Students Office needs assistants, instructors, ambassadors

STAFF REPORT

The Dean of Students Office is offering several positions that will give students the opportunity to build leadership skills and speaking and presentation abilities. Applications for each of these opportunities must be returned by March 8. They are available in the Dean of Students Office, 518 Patterson Office Tower. For more information, call 257-6597.

• Kentucky Welcome student assistant

The responsibilities of the student assistants include but are not limited to: welcoming new students and their families to campus, facilitating introductions and assisting new students in making connections, sharing accurate and helpful information about campus life, and assisting in the smooth running of the program. Fifteen students will be selected for this role which begins on Friday, Aug. 23.

• UK 101/201 peer instructor

UK 101 (for freshmen) and 201 (for transfer students) are academic orientation courses that help improve student performance and retention. The role of the peer instructor is to assist the faculty instructor and guest presenters with facilitating and teaching sessions. Other responsibilities include attending an in-service training (Monday, Aug. 26, and Tuesday, Aug. 27), attending all classes and interacting with students during class and out-of-class activities.

• THE CAUSE peer educator

Peer educators for the College Alcohol Use Student Educators help educate students about making low-risk drinking choices. The mission of the CAUSE is to empower students within the UK community to make safer and healthier lifestyle choices, particularly as they relate to alcohol. Peer educators will have the opportunity to speak to student organizations and groups about how to live a healthy life while at UK. All peer educators will receive a $500 scholarship for each semester.

• Student Ambassador Program

Five outstanding students are chosen to represent and promote UK each year. These students help with recruitment of new students and travel to UK Preview Nights. They also assist with Kentucky Welcome, Homecoming, alumni activities and other events on campus where a UK student presence is requested. The ambassadors speak to middle and high school classes, community clubs and organizations about UK and college life. Hosting students, student groups, parents, dignitaries and other campus visitors also is part of their responsibilities.

To qualify for this position, applicants must be undergraduates with a comprehensive and working knowledge of UK. Strong, dynamic public speaking skills are required. Applicants must have completed at least 30 credit hours and have a cumulative grade-point average of 3.0 or better. Ambassadors must have ample time available in their schedules and must be flexible concerning night and weekend availability.

Ambassadors receive a scholarship with the understanding that each recipient will be available on the average of 10 hours per week.

HELPING

President Lee Todd joked that the third time was a charm. The creation of the center is an example of UK fulfilling its higher purpose, he said.

"We need to get our hands dirty on Kentucky's problems," he said.

Resident Joan Brannon compared the neighborhood to a person in need of CPR, and said the initiative is the initial resuscitating breath for an area struggling for life.

"I'm hoping that it will be the beginning for developing processes that address issues in the area," she said.

HUDD provided the money to start this initiative, but Walker said more funds will be sought to continue its programs.

The value of this new initiative goes beyond money, said P.G. Peoples, president and CEO of the Lexington Urban League, which is one of the partners involved in the new initiative. He said the collaboration between UK and the community is what matters.

"This is a wise use of human resources," he said.

SAB makes students laugh with professional comic acts

Free smiles: New campus entertainment gives option to experience free, lively comedy shows on Tuesday nights at the Student Center

By Amy Jo Gill
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

Daniel Richardson is tired of watching reruns of "The Golden Girls."
"Blanche is really hot, but I can only take so much," said the foreign language and international economics senior.
Richardson isn't the only one. Mike Tabben, the public relations director for Student Activities Board, said they realized the need for entertainment on campus during the weekdays and have done something about it.
Beginning this week, SAB has a new series of shows called the "Comedy Caravan." It will make its debut Tuesday in the Cat's Den in the Student Center.
Justin Shofner, a civil engineering freshman, said he's excited about this new opportunity for a night out.

"It's definitely a good thing. Campus needs more entertainment for students, especially for free," he said about SAB's newly instituted series of Tuesday night comedy shows.
Tabben said that Dave Bailey, director for Campus Life, presented the idea to SAB, which approved to sponsor the event — something that Tabben said hasn't been done in the past.
"It's something to do on a Tuesday night especially if you can't get into Comedy Off Broadway," Tabben said.
Tabben said that students who cannot attend Comedy Off Broadway are not getting gyped in this deal because the same agency that places people there has selected the comedians for the Comedy Caravan.
Comedy Caravan is a Louisville based show, run by Tom Sobel.

"We're bringing the real deal to campus," Sobel said. "Our shows are typically an hour to an hour and a half."
Local TV personality Lee Cruise (of WLEX) will host the first show. All shows feature comedians such as Lord Carrott, Spike Davis, Cleveland and John Hope.
The comedians have been on TV shows such as Conan O'Brien, DEF Comedy Jam, HBO, Showtime, Comedy Central and on WKQQ with Bob and Tom.
"Free live entertainment is always a plus," said Regan Wainscott, a civil engineering junior.
In addition to the comedy lineup, which has no cover charge, SAB is also adding a ride into the mix.
In an effort to involve students living on South Campus, a charter bus will pick-up and drop students off.

Sobel said all students are welcome, to the first show at 8 p.m., Tuesday.
In fact, only student participation will make the shows worthwhile.
"You can have the funniest comedian in the world, but it's no good unless there are people there to laugh," Sobel said.

Want to hear a joke?

Comedy Caravan will have its first show at 8 p.m., Tuesday in the Cat's Den, which is located in the Student Center. Featured comedians will be Lord Carrott and John Hope. Tickets are free.
The "Care-A-Van" will give students a ride to the show. It will run from 7 p.m. to 11 p.m. from the Student Center to Columbia Avenue around Sorority Circle, next to the dorms at the Aquatic Center and then to Donovan and Haggin Halls.
For more information, call Student Activities Board at 257-8867.

Collateral Damage

Arnold Schwarzenegger stars as Gordon Brewer in Collateral Damage, a film about international terrorism and revenge. Brewer takes matters into his own hands after a terrorist kills his family. The film will have a sneak preview at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the Worsham Theater, which is located in the Student Center. Tickets are free and are available at the Student Center.

EXPLODING BIRDS

Professor testing urban legends

Dum dum da dum: Professor testing the legend that birds eating rice at wedding makes them explode, he hypothesizes otherwise

By Priya Scroggins
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

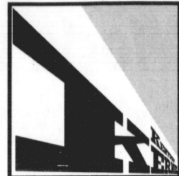

James Krupa loves birds.
The biology professor has more than 100 domestic birds at his home.
He is conducting an experiment that he believes challenges the urban myth that throwing rice outside of the church at weddings is detrimental to the birds that eat the grains left on the ground. Apparently, if the birds eat the rice and drink water, they will explode.
"In society, we have many urban myths that we have no real proof of, all I am trying to do is see whether they are true or not," he said.

Krupa often discusses his experiment with his biology classes, which helps the students learn about the scientific method as well as other things.
"Our first day in class, he told us about it and showed us in an insightful way how it is possible to disprove common myths," said Kellyn Chaffins, a psychology freshman and one of Krupa's students.
In a recent poll that Krupa conducted with his biology students, he discovered that 45 percent of them heard the urban myth and believed it. Another one of his students who learned of the experiment was thrilled because of what it may prove.

"I've heard that legend before, and I like the fact that he is doing this experiment because it shows that we often take the truth for granted and believe what is told to us without finding out if it is true or not," said Dora Cantrell, a psychology freshman.
There are ethical considerations for this experiment, Krupa said. Because of his love for his pets, Krupa won't perform the experiment directly on his birds.
To do the experiment, Krupa said he had to discover a way to emulate a bird's digestive system, which becomes problematic because birds don't have stomachs.

As part of his experiment, he filled plastic bags of very lightweight material with 100 ml. of water and rice, and twisted the bag tightly as if to represent the crop of a bird — the crop of a bird is near the bird's chest and is where rice would be stored. He watched the imitation crop for 12 hours to see if it would expand to the point of combustion.
"It has yet to explode," Krupa said.
He has fed rice to the birds, but none have exploded. In fact, he found that rice is a treat for the birds.
Although he has yet to find any truth to this myth, he does make a suggestion — throw birdseed instead.

Cats shoot their way past USC

Scramble

Senior point guard J.P. Blevins attempts to steal the ball from South Carolina's Chuck Eidson during UK's 91-74 win Saturday. Blevins played his first game in five weeks since breaking his right wrist on Dec. 22 against Indiana. He had four points and three assists. Eidson led the Gamecocks with a game-high 25 points and seven assists.

Domination: UK scores inside and outside, rolls to 91-74 victory against Gamecocks

By Will Messer
SPORTSDAILY EDITOR

South Carolina's game plan backfired Saturday at Rupp Arena in the form of a UK 3-for-all.

The Gamecocks (13-8, 3-4 Southeastern Conference) planned to force UK, the SEC's worst 3-point shooting team, to beat them with jump shots.

And No. 10 UK did just that. The Cats (15-5, 5-3 SEC) made 11-of-22 3-pointers and shot 58.3 percent overall to down USC 91-74.

"They just hit shots against us," said USC junior guard Chuck Eidson. "That's what we wanted to make them do and they stepped up and did it."

Sophomore guard Gerald Fitch led UK with 17 points. Nine of those came as he drained three 3s in 90 seconds.

Fitch, who made 7-of-10 field goal attempts, credited his teammates for creating shots.

"(Senior forward) Tayshaun (Prince) got me a good look and the team was moving the ball well," he said. "I just took the open shots."

Fitch's 3s were part of a 22-4 run that saw UK break open a game it trailed 19-18 with 11:45 left in the first half.

UK took a 46-31 lead into the half, but less than six minutes into the second half USC trimmed the lead to seven.

But UK wouldn't fold. The Cats ripped off an 11-1 run that put the game away and UK in front 63-46 with 11:41 left.

"We kept our intensity up and that shows that our team is maturing," Fitch said.

Prince added 16 points on 7-of-12 shooting and sophomore guard Cliff Hawkins had 15.

Junior Jules Camara joined the party, too. The 6-foot-11 center made his first 3-pointer since Dec. 11 1999.

UK did more than just hit 3-pointers.

The Cats had 44 points in the paint compared to USC's 18, and outrebounded USC 38-27. USC Coach Dave Odom said the Cats dominated the game.

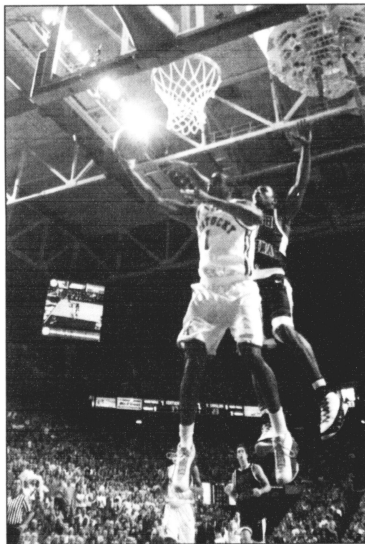

"They did whatever they wanted to do, whenever they wanted to do it, to whomever they wanted to do it to."

The game marked senior guard J.P. Blevins' return to the lineup. He had been sidelined since breaking his right wrist Dec. 22 against Indiana.

"It felt good getting back out there," Blevins said. "Cliff was able to stay fresh and Gerald almost had a double-double. It helps when everyone is at their regular spots."

It also helps when everyone is making shots.

"When you make shots early, it's contagious," Coach Tubby Smith said. "If we make shots we set the tone. Today we were able to control the tempo."

UK swim teams finish 1-1 in dual meets

Both the UK men's and women's swimming and diving teams defeated Cincinnati, but were beaten by Indiana in dual meets Saturday at the Lancaster Aquatic Center. ### Former UK assistant released from Georgia Tech

ATLANTA — Former UK defensive backs coach Rick Smith was forced to resign as Georgia Tech's defensive coordinator after a committee concluded he misrepresented himself in his profile.

Smith, hired last month by new coach Chan Gailey, admitted Monday that he never played on the football and baseball teams at Florida State, as his profile said. He offered his resignation Friday.

Smith had served as assistant head coach, recruiting coordinator and defensive backs coach at UK last season before taking the job at Georgia Tech.

"I'm unemployed," he said. "I don't have a job at Kentucky. I don't have a job at Georgia Tech. I'm basically ruined."

7 Year Plan

In for the long haul

Not everyone who goes to college is lucky enough to finish in four, five, or even six years. Some people just need a little extra time to reach their goals. And it can be a little difficult to explain to your friends and family why you're reluctant to get on with your life and stop mooching off of everyone. Hopefully, the following list of explanations will help you ease the pain of loved ones who just want you to get a damn job.

Here are some tips for justifying a long education.

Explain to everyone that you simply love the campus, faculty and local area. Do not let them rope you into telling what you love about each one because we all know you've been playing freecell on your computer for the past five semesters.

Normal people never have to say "fourth year senior," therefore, it's perfectly OK to just say "I had coughing (mumble) year senior." Then, change the subject immediately.

When the local clubs and bars on student nights start to get suspicious about your college ID dated six years ago, create a diversion with either violence or running like hell.

People will inevitably ask you why you've decided to stick around for so long. The best thing to do is explain that education is like making love to a fine woman and come up with a confusing analogy to scare them into never speaking to you again.

Try to pass yourself off as a graduate student because it's socially acceptable for them to have not done anything with their life by the age of 30.

Don't make yourself known on campus because some student will eventually realize that you're the same guy that outran the cops with two keys in his hands like eight years ago. I'd like to see you pull that feat again.

Freshmen today will not necessarily relate to your fond childhood memories of "Fat Albert" and "He-Man." It's much better to stick with Pokémon and N'SYNC.

IN OUR OPINION

Parking nightmare plagues community

It's quite arguable that one of the most stressful situations to deal with at UK is parking. If you don't have a UK permit, you can not legally park in a UK lot without expecting a $10 fine to be awaiting your return. If you plan to stay on campus for more than two hours, it's in your best interest not to park at a city meter, as you will likely receive a $15 ticket for overtime parking.

You can't park on residential streets near campus unless you have a Residential Parking Permit, which are only given to people who live on the street. Basically, you can't park anywhere around here without getting a ticket or being towed. While it's understandable that parking must be regulated, it's undoubtedly unfair to the UK community that there are so few places to park on campus.

It's a nightmare — it sucks. UK has 15,739 official parking spaces with more than 20,000 people on campus. So, it makes sense that more than 72,000 parking citations were written in the 1999-2000 fiscal year and more than 3,000 towed cars. It's no secret that UK's parking situation isn't the most friendly, but it gets worse.

Officials of the Lexington-Fayette Urban County Government cite parking violators, too. And it appears that they may be getting ready to get a little stricter. Just recently, a proposal initially created two years ago reemerged before the Urban County Council. The proposal, close to its second reading, suggests that after a driver collects three parking tickets an officer can tow the car at the fourth violation. Subsequently, the driver must pay all three of the citations, which double after 10 working days, in addition to the towing fee in order to repossess the car.

After all expenses are paid, the potential grand total is about $210. It is still uncertain, under the proposed ordinance, if the violator must pay previous citations. But those poor individuals who have been collecting tickets for years had better hope that the proposal seeks to forgive unpaid parking fines.

The new ordinance is not only ridiculous, but there is no reason for it other than to create another way for the government to make money off its citizens. Supporters claim that the policy will generate more parking space, when in reality there are only a minimal amount of spaces to accommodate a whole lot of drivers.

What is a driver to do? Perhaps everyone should just walk to school regardless of how far they live away from campus. Indeed, UK needs to at least offer enough spaces to accommodate the permits it sells, but the city should help, too. Would it be too much to ask that Lexington give up a couple of streets for parking or at least allow drivers to park at a meter for more than two hours without getting fined?

ASSISTANT DIALOGUE EDITOR

This Enron ordeal has begun to take up way too much airtime in the American media. When I turn on Fox News I'm looking for entertainment, plain and simple — and Enron's just not cutting it.

I want to see a redwood tree crushing a Green-peace activist or a Senator caught having an affair with a transsexual. I don't want to see hour upon hour of boring-ass accounting improprieties. Unless Dick Cheney got a piece during that private talk with Enron executives, I really don't care.

So, in order to get American news coverage back on track (sensationalizing sexual trysts and random acts of violence while ignoring issues of global concern), I'm resolving this situation right now. First off, Kenneth Lay will not be sent to prison. He'll repay his debt to society in a much more beneficial way. Each of the Lay family homes in Aspen, Colo., and Texas will be seized and turned into luxurious apartment-style mansions for the homeless. To earn their keep, the formerly homeless will have to knit uniforms for the U.S. military.

The federal money saved by this free labor will be put into a fund for compensating stockholders who lost their money when Enron collapsed. But, anyone whose net worth is more than $500,000 gets left out to dry. Call me heartless, but somehow the painful moans of millionaires lamenting a lost hundred-grand fail to stir me to sympathy.

Now, Lay and his charming wife will be forced to work 60-hour weeks in their former home sponge-bathing new arrivals and having medical and cosmetic research performed on them.

But we won't take away all three of the Lay family homes. No, that would be too cruel. I know I was moved to tears when Ms. Lay cried to us all on national TV about the hardships she and her innocent husband are facing.

They'll be allowed to keep their million-dollar Texas condo. However, they'll have to share it with Ted Kennedy and Gary Condit, and Mrs. Lay will only be al-

College sports at a crossroads

Given the fact that taking away UK's bowl game is the equivalent of canceling Elton John's Playboy subscription, will the sanctions levied against UK on Thursday and Alabama on Friday accomplish the NCAA's goal? Will cuts in scholarships, limits on recruiting methods and elimination of bowl games finally put an end to cheating in the SEC?

Those who follow UK sports may never know who all was in on the gig, or even how much of the same thing — in a much less blatant manner, of course — continues today. Supporters of a team tend to brush aside any abnormalities so long as the W's keep piling up, which is perhaps what makes the football scandal even more embarrassing.

My main concern, as both an avid UK fan and a quasi-sometimes-journalist, is that the main problem lies not with the coaches, but with the boosters.

Despite the storied tradition of Kentucky sports, only a few things have remained constant throughout all of the scandals, all of the payoffs and all of the tainted victories. The coaching staff departs, the players come and go and the administration changes, but the boosters more or less remain the same.

Such underhanded dealings no doubt take place in many programs, if not in every program. Many get caught, but most probably don't.

This is not to argue that every violation of an NCAA by-law necessarily merits condemnation. I myself believe that the NCAA often uses tightly written regulations as more of a way to preserve its monopoly rather than to protect the integrity of the game. But as long as the rules are in place, and as long as UK chooses to participate in the league, the rules should be followed.

I suppose that it is easy for me to say, sitting away from the everyday grind of recruiting. It cannot be easy to keep a winning program on top, and it is even harder to do so at a school where being on top means not just winning most games, but also winning a national championship.

I can sit here in my underwear and write away about integrity, purity and virtue, but that won't persuade the next blue chip linebacker to choose Lexington over Knoxville. All the self-righteous indignation I can muster will not result in students tearing down the goal posts at Commonwealth Stadium, or Tubby cutting down the nets in Atlanta.

That sort of resembles my theory on exercising. If no one worked out, nobody would care. Men wouldn't have to suck in their gut every time a girl walks into the room, and women wouldn't feel the urge to look like vermicelli in designer clothes. The problem is that if only takes one asshole to pick up a weight and make everyone else look bad. Before you know it, everyone has a gym membership.

Likewise, it only takes one recruiter to grease the palm of some high school coach before every other team believes it should have to do the same just to keep up.

It would be far better, in my opinion, if the players were the ones receiving the money rather than coaches and parents. Schools make tens of millions of dollars off of college sports anyway, so why shouldn't some of the money go to those who make such profits possible? If this kind of system were put in place, though, the nation's athletics departments might as well just break away from their respective schools altogether. They could start their own little NBA.

For now, observers of college sports will continue to wonder how Stanford and Duke manage to field top-10 teams year in and year out without dumbing-down academic standards. We will continue to see star athletes drive around campus in Lincoln Navigators and Land Cruisers, when many would not be able to eat without a meal card. Athletics directors will continue to feel the pressure from boosters and alumni to win, win, win, or else be fired, fired, fired.

But all of the smirking and winking, without any real action, will eventually catch up to us, Kentucky fans, as well as fans everywhere else, will have to choose whether they want a semi-pro team or a college team.

The difference is stark.

Clay McDaniel is a finance senior. His views do not necessarily represent those of the Kentucky Kernel.

After a couple of years, when the Lays and their cronies are finally beginning to resettle into a somewhat normal life, we will be put in charge of analyzing and re-drafting the federal budget.

Before too long, this pesky economic recession will be a thing of the past. After they take care of that, they'll move right along to investigating the national debt. Give the guys a little time to work their magic and I'm sure we'll find out that, in fact, the nations of the world actually owe us billions of dollars.

By the time the debt and recession are wiped out it will probably be time for the next presidential race. That's where the Arthur Anderson guys will really prove their worth.

In the true spirit of bi-partisanship, both the Democratic and Republican teams will be allowed to enjoy the services of the gang (to hell with those useless third-party candidates).

Mitch McConnell won't have to worry about defending the First Amendment against these un-American heathens who are calling for campaign finance reform, because we'll soon discover that illegal soft-money campaign contributions no longer exist.

After a couple of years, when the Lays and their cronies are finally beginning to resettle into a somewhat normal life, we will be put in charge of analyzing and re-drafting the federal budget.

Cats lose sixth straight, drop to 1-8 in SEC play

Down low: Georgia utilizes size advantage to outscore, outrebound Cats in the post

By Steve Jones
ASSISTANT SPORTSDAILY EDITOR

UK had its worst offensive performance of the year Sunday in a 76-50 defeat to the Georgia Lady Bulldogs.

The Cats posted season lows for points, field goal percentage and field goals made.

Georgia, ranked No. 19, forced 30 Cat turnovers in the victory. "We're a much better team than the way we played," said UK Coach Bernadette Mattox. "I'm very disappointed with the way we came out tonight."

The Lady Bulldogs (15-6, 4-3 Southeastern Conference) used a drastic size advantage to outscore the Cats 36-18 in the paint.

Georgia, which has six players 6-foot-2 or taller, held a 43-30 rebounding edge over the Cats. Georgia center Kara Braxton and forward Ebony Felder, both freshmen, collected 10 rebounds each.

"When you're playing against 6-6, 6-4 and we've got a 5-11in (sophomore forward) Shambirica Jones, it's a factor," Mattox said. "Size did make a difference."

UK senior LaTonya McDole said it was difficult to score against the height of the Lady Bulldogs.

"During the game you have to realize that the shots you've had before aren't really there because of their height," said McDole, who is 6-foot-1.

Braxton dominated the inside. She made 10-of-14 field goal attempts and scored 24 points, including 10 straight during one stretch in the second half.

Because they had amassed such a large lead on the Cats, Georgia Coach Andy Landers took Braxton out with 6:50 left. She needed just 19 minutes of playing time to lead all players in scoring.

The Cats (8-13, 1-8 SEC) never seemed to recover after falling behind 6-0 in the opening minutes. UK missed its first five free throw attempts while Georgia increased its lead in the first half.

Mattox said the Cats, who had not played a game since Jan. 27, had an excellent week of practice and were expecting to carry that execution into the Georgia game.

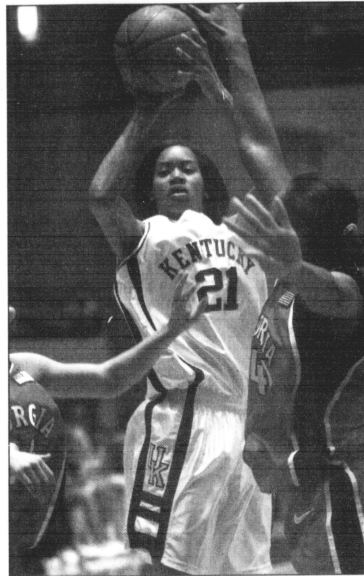

"We just didn't execute our offense tonight," Mattox said. "This is not any indication of this basketball team."

If there was a highlight in the game for UK, it was the second half performance of freshman guard Sara Potts.

Potts, who was scoreless in the first 20 minutes, made 5-of-8 shots in the second half and tied her career-high with 15 points.

"In the second half, I just decided we had to come out and play hard and I did my best to get the team going," Potts said.

Other than Potts, the Cats never did get going. UK has lost six straight games, and sits alone in last place in the SEC.

Track Cats victorious at McCravy

Preparation: Runners and field athletes win 11 events at home 'tune up' meet

Alex Williams
STAFF WRITER

The UK men and women's track teams combined to claim 11 first-place finishes at the Rod McCravy Memorial Track and Field Meet Saturday at Nutter Field House.

Using the meet as preparation for following weeks, UK Coach Don Weber said his team is headed in the right direction.

"We had a good meet at Florida, and we came back with another good meet (at UK)," Weber said. "We're heading in the direction you want to be in this time of year."

Weber called this meet a "tune-up" as the Cats prepare to travel to Iowa State next week and Arkansas two weeks following that for the Southeastern Conference Championships.

"Track is such a championship-oriented sport, but what really matters is how you are at the end of the year," Weber said. "All these seasonal meets are tune-up meets, and of course the better you do the more enthused and eager they are to continue training and racing."

Junior Ernest Simms, who doubles as a wide receiver for the football team, helped lead the men's team. Running in only his second meet since high school, Simms took first place finishes in the 60-meter dash with a time of 6.78 seconds and in the 200-meter dash with a time of 21.55 seconds.

Hunter Spencer and the 400-meter relay team consisting of James Dooty, Chad Johnson, Pat Ciurlys and Patton Seagraves also put together fine performances. Spencer, a junior from Willington, Conn., won the 800-meter run in a time of 1:49.57 and made the provisional qualifying time for the NCAA Championships. The makeshift relay team came back on the fourth leg to claim first place with time of 3:16.25.

On the women's side, Beth Heimann, who owns the third fastest time this year in the 200 meter run, won the mile, and ran a 55-second split on the mile relay. Simidele Adeagbo also had a stellar meet winning the triple jump at 40'09.50.

"We look really good," sophomore James Dooty said. "The main thing is to go out and run our own races, and lay it all out on the line."

But this meet is in both teams' rearview mirrors.

"This wasn't a very big deal," Dooty said. "It was kind of to get us prepared for later on in the season. We kind of looked past this meet and used it as something to train with and get us tuned up for next week."

This is tissue.

This is not.
