Jesse Jackson says he will seek the Democratic nomination

By PETER MATTIAZZE
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Jesse Jackson, declaring he has a good chance of becoming America's first black president, said yesterday he will announce his candidacy for the Democratic nomination on Oct. 10 and pledged to campaign for "jobs, jobs, jobs, peace and justice."

"In a real sense, I'm trying to fulfill the best dimension of the Constitution," he said. "If I can in fact become president, indeed as (John) Kennedy became as a Catholic, indeed as (Franklin D.) Roosevelt came riding in a wheelchair... every woman can, every man, boy and woman and girl can," he said on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America."

"So in a real sense, I'm giving America a chance to make a choice to fulfill the highest and best of an authentic and honest democracy," he said.

Jackson, who for months has been campaigning around the nation as an undeclared candidate, said he will make his candidacy official in Raleigh, N.C., at the national convention of his Rainbow Coalition.

"We agree that what we need is not just a new occupant for the White House. We need a new direction for our nation," said Jackson, 45. "We need a government that cares, a president committed to the well-being of the American family who will protect them from the exportation of jobs and the importation of drugs."

"But if one does not vote for me because I'm black, I'll leave that in God's hands..."

Jackson, who in 1984 won primaries in Louisiana and the District of Columbia, becomes the most liberal presidential contender for 1988.

He said his new campaign will work on broadening the party's base of support, widening its "mainstream into a river," in part by continuing his old theme of registering new voters.

"The leadership of the Democratic party is going to be much fairer to me in part because I'm part of the leadership of the Democratic party," Jackson said.

"The party has recognized the errors of its ways in 1984. It will expand and coalesce and win in 1988," he said. "We will work out any internal problems internally. My campaign must focus externally on jobs, jobs, jobs, peace and justice."

People should vote against him "if I do not make sense," Jackson said.

Jackson, relying heavily on his support from organized labor, formally disclosed his plans during a Labor Day swing through Pittsburgh, Cleveland and New York City.

He made his first announcement on ABC-TV from Pittsburgh, attended a Roman Catholic mass at a racially mixed inner city church, and marched through a supportive crowd of more than 5,000 people watching the city's 100th Labor Day parade.

From the pulpit at the Roman Catholic Church, the Baptist minister led pre-parade worshippers, through a 10-point "Workers' Bill of Rights."

Jackson said workers have rights to a job, to union representation, a living wage, safe work place and pension security. He played to the local audience, saying American steel workers should not lose their jobs to foreign "slave labor."

"Let us fight together and not one another," he said.

Jackson was scheduled to attend a Labor Day picnic in Cleveland and a Caribbean-American festival and parade in Brooklyn before joining striking NBC-TV technicians in Manhattan.

The Jackson camp, with an official presidential exploratory committee in place since March, has placed new emphasis on organization, in contrast to the 1984 campaign that was notorious for its chaotic pace and minute-to-minute schedule changes.

Jackson officials have a goal of raising $5 million by March. So far, campaign staffers say, the Jackson forces have brought in around $1 million.

A Time magazine poll published Sunday said Jackson remained the leading choice for president among likely Democratic voters, with Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis a distant second.

MDA telethon reaches record $39-million mark

By ROBERT MACY
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — The 22nd annual Jerry Lewis Labor Day Telethon raised a record $39,021,723 yesterday and workers tossed confetti as the entertainer declared the effort "a good day for mankind."

The show surpassed last year's record of $34,086,773 by nearly $5 million. A long list of corporate sponsors presented Lewis with an additional $34,306,197 in pledges above the $39 million raised across the United States and Canada.

Celebrities sang and danced through the 21½-hour event and muscular dystrophy victims and their family members made poignant pleas for funds to help fight 12 different diseases and 24 neuromuscular disorders targeted by the New York-based Muscular Dystrophy Association.

Donations soared past last year's record in the 20th hour of the telethon, bringing cheers from a crowd jammed into a sports pavilion at Caesars Palace where the telethon was produced.

"As corny as it may sound, my God, what a good day for mankind," Lewis told a national audience.

One of the most touching moments came when Bob Sampson, former vice president of United Airlines, told of his long battle against the crippling disease.

"These lungs are going fast," the wheelchair-bound Sampson said in an emotional speech. "You don't die of muscular dystrophy, you die of pneumonia, or something else. If not, ultimately you will die of strangulation. So they do a tracheotomy and put you on a respirator. So you buy six months."

"I don't want a respirator," Sampson said, his voice breaking. "I want to sit up and see what this looks like when it comes to get you."

JERRY LEWIS

Earlier in the show, Lewis played a videotape of Jim Grigsby, a Las Vegas firefighter who helped launch a national program 25 years ago in which firefighters stand on busy corners, collecting donations in boots for MDA. Grigsby learned about two years ago that he had a form of the disease, and died earlier this year.

Lewis, who had attended Grigsby's funeral, was visibly shaken by the segment, and his voice broke as he continued the show.

Lewis, who spends half of his time throughout the year working to raise money for the New York-based Muscular Dystrophy Association, sought "one dollar more" than last year's telethon record. He said this year's budget for the association will be $100 million, with the money used for a variety of purposes, including patient care and research.

Lewis' co-hosts included Sammy Davis Jr., Ed McMahon, Casey Kasem, Julius LaRosa and Tony Orlando. Stars making appearances included Frank Sinatra, Ann-Margret, Tom Jones and Paul Anka.

The telethon, which began with a single station in New York City in 1966, was carried by some 200 stations this year.

UK fraternity raises money for research

While most people rested this Labor Day weekend, others worked to raise money for charity.

The 22nd annual Jerry Lewis Labor Day Telethon raised more than $39 million for Muscular Dystrophy.

The 21½-hour telethon was broadcast live from Caesars Palace in Las Vegas and was carried by 200 stations in the United States, including WTVQ-TV in Lexington.

But some of the work for MDA took place here on the UK campus.

The UK chapter of the Kappa Alpha fraternity contributed time and money to show its support for its national philanthropy.

On Saturday morning, Sept. 5, the KA's sponsored a pancake breakfast at their house on the UK campus. Invitations were extended to all fraternities and sororities to contribute $25 and eat all of the pancakes they wanted.

Graham Baughman, vice president of the UK's KA chapter, said about $325 was raised for MDA as all but three greek organizations donated $25.

On Monday, 15 fraternity brothers participated as volunteers at the Republic Savings Bank "Labor Day UK" race. KA's MDA Chairman Craig Cumberlandge said about 450 participated in this year's race. KA has participated for the second year and had hoped to raise $2,500.

Also yesterday, the KA's volunteered for the late night phone shift at the Fayette Mall. Twenty KA's, working from 8:30 p.m. to 1:30 a.m., made $9,000 in pledges.

This is the eighth year the fraternity.

Traffic fatalities low during holiday

By ROSS L. ANDERSEN
Contributing Writer

Fatalities for the Labor Day weekend were running low to average, according to Kentucky state police.

Eight fatal accidents were reported statewide as of 10:15 last night with none involving more than one fatality per accident.

The accidents occurred throughout the state with none reported in the two major cities of Louisville or Lexington. Elizabethtown reported two fatalities.

Several UK students said they didn't notice much difference in traffic this weekend compared to other weekends.

Barbara Jette, an early childhood education senior, said traffic was light on Interstate 64 and that police surveillance was low as well.

"I thought the police would be out in full force but driving to Louisville on Friday, I didn't see one," she said.

Jette said traffic was light on I-64 until she reached the outskirts of Louisville, where it became a little more congested.

Traveling in the southern part of the state was similar, Ed Patsley, a marketing junior, said he also encountered light traffic.

"I had no problems on I-75 between here and Somerset. I think I saw two patrol cars the whole time," he said.

Patsley said he saw no accidents and the day was like any other trip home.

Records weren't available to compare speeding violations to last year, a state police spokesman said. However, he said citations were running about average in comparison to normal years.

Sessions on stress to start Monday

By TYRONE JOHNSTON
Contributing Writer

There's 300 pages left to read in "War and Peace" and you've got an essay test on it tomorrow. Your best friend is sitting home just too busy she wants to start seeing your best friend.

You're experiencing stress.

From 2 to 4:30 p.m. Sept. 14, in 250 Student Center, there will be a stress management presentation to help students deal with stress.

This presentation will be the first of three this semester. The other meetings will be announced soon, said Mike Nichols, director and staff psychologist of the Counseling and Testing Center.

Nichols said he plans to set down a theoretical base about stress. He will try to explain what stress is, where it comes from, and then show a psychological approach to stress.

Nichols said he will "give 10 steps to dealing with stress and the problems of stress."

Nichols said "a little stress is good and you want this kind of stress."

"What happens sometimes is that a person has too much stress and problems can arise," he said. "To lose so much stress a person needs to relax."

There are several relaxation techniques, such as physical and mental exercises, Nichols said.

Having a good diet can also help in relieving stress; a good diet does not actually mean to try to lose weight but to eat well and to exercise regularly, he said.

Nichols also will speak on the importance of humor in the presentation.

"People need to take themselves and others less serious; if you take yourself too serious you will tend to look at events too seriously and this causes stress," Nichols said.

"How a person looks at an event and the event itself can cause stress; what you tell yourself about your surroundings can effect how much stress you have."

The stress management presentation is open to the public and is free.

Tickets for Hayes show to go on sale Sept. 19

Staff reports

Tickets to see actress Helen Hayes perform Oct. 21 will go on sale Saturday, Sept. 19, at the Singletary Center for the Arts ticket office from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

After Sept. 19, the ticket office will resume normal hours: noon to 4 p.m. Monday-Thursday and noon to 6 p.m. Friday.

Considered the first lady of the American theatre and winner of two Academy Awards, Hayes will help the UK Fine Arts Department launch its first fund drive.

Full-time UK students may purchase two tickets for $5 each. A valid UK ID card must be presented at the ticket office.

Tickets for the public are priced at $20, $50, and $100. The $100 tickets include admission to an invitation-only reception for Hayes after the performance.

As super-spy, Caine does little to help 'Protocol'

By WESLEY MILLER
Senior Staff Critic

After watching "The Fourth Protocol," one thought immediately comes to mind: How can a film that has so much going for it turn out to be so bland and uninteresting?

"The Fourth Protocol" is a new espionage thriller starring Michael Caine ("Hannah and her Sisters") as a British secret agent caught in a cat-and-mouse game with Russian spy Pierce Brosnan (star of TV's "Remington Steele"), whose mission is to detonate a nuclear weapon in England.

In many ways this film is similar to the infinitely superior "No Way Out," which starred Kevin Costner ("The Untouchables") as a Navy lieutenant on the trail of corrupt politician Gene Hackman ("Hoosiers"). However, that film contained enough action and thrills to keep the viewer on the edge of his seat — literally — right up to the final twist of the plot.

At first glance, there is very little difference in this adaptation of Frederick Forsythe's novel of the same name. Brosnan and Caine act as British counterparts to Costner and Hackman, and both seem well-suited to their roles.

Indeed, Caine is, as usual, superb in creating the characterization of a talented, yet weary, super-spy who is one moment avoiding danger from international hoodlums and the next dodging insubordination charges from bosses who don't particularly like his style of doing things.

Pierce Brosnan is the real disappointment. To be more specific, the problem is with his character, Major Valeri Petrovich, a silent, morbid fellow who doesn't say 50 words in the entire picture.

Brosnan does all he can with the role, but Petrovich is such an ill-defined character that Laurence Olivier in his hey-day couldn't have made this guy believable. Petrovich is supposed to be Moscow's top young agent, a model of ingenuity and self-control, but when he is not killing people, his metabolism is geared toward nothing but relieving his sexual appetite.

A weak character, however, can always be overcome by a strong storyline and lightning-quick pacing. Unfortunately, "The Fourth Protocol" misses the mark here, too. Every plot detail unfolds with the immediacy of drying paint, so it's no wonder that each development is met with audience apathy.

Rated R. Now playing at South and North Park theaters.

3 Wildcats are given pink slips

Staff and Associated Press reports

Three former UK football players were released yesterday from the National Football League as teams trimmed rosters to the 45-man, opening-day limit.

Running back Marc Logan, UK's second-leading rusher last season, was released by the Cincinnati Bengals along with 11 other players.

Logan was taken by the Bengals in the fifth round of the NFL draft last spring.

Also released were Jon Dumbauld, a 1985 UK graduate and defensive lineman, and Cornell Burbage who was the Cats' leading pass receiver last year.

Dumbauld was let go by the New Orleans Saints while Burbage was released by the Dallas Cowboys.

Dumbauld said he was surprised by the move.

"I really didn't expect it at all," he said. "It was the farthest thing from my mind. Apparently they feel I'm the most expendable on the defensive line. I don't agree with that. I think I'm one of the top three defensive linemen."

Logan was the Bengals' leading rusher in a preseason game against the Saints Friday night. The 5-foot-

Former UK running back Marc Logan was released by the Cincinnati Bengals yesterday.

11 207-pound back rushed for 28 yards on three carries in the Bengals' 26-14 loss.

For UK last season, Logan racked up 346 yards on 109 carries and set a record for most carries in a game, against Mississippi State with 35. He was the Cats' second-leading rusher last season behind tailback Ivy Joe Hunter.

Released by the Bengals, in addition to Logan, were six-year veteran linebacker Ron Simpkins; defensive backs R.L. Harris, Sonny Gordon and Daryl Smith; wide receivers Greg Meehan and Tom Brown; running back David McCluskey; punter Scott Fulhage, quarterback Tom Ehrhardt and offensive tackle Jim Warne, Heim said.

None of the rookies released were drafted higher than the fifth round, he said.

Lady Kats win tourney

Staff reports

If the UK volleyball players felt any pressure from their No. 18 pre-season national ranking, they certainly didn't show it this weekend.

The Lady Kats defended their Kentucky Kickoff Classic Championship by routing Eastern Kentucky University and the University of Louisville at Memorial Coliseum.

UK was never seriously challenged in the six consecutive games it captured.

On Friday, the Lady Kats gave up just eight points to EKV in three games. UK made quick work of the Colonels, 15-3, 15-0.

Kentucky continued its hot play the next evening against U of L. The Cardinals jumped out to an early 2-0 lead, but the Lady Kats roared back to take the first game, 15-7.

"The turning point in the game was when Laura Linder began setting the ball to Lisa Dausman for what amounted to 10 kills," UK coach Kathy DeBoer said.

Kentucky controlled the strong servers from Louisville and cruised to the championship with two more victories, 15-10, 15-4.

"Louisville served very aggressively tonight and kept us on our guard," DeBoer said. "We knew we were going to have to play tough tonight to win, and that's what we did."

While the UK defense covered the Cardinals, Dausman bombed away at the net.

The 6-foot-1 senior middle blocker dominated the front line with her 10 kills. For her play, Dausman was named the tournament's most valuable player.

UK's Kim Thompson was also named to the all-tournament team. The junior outside hitter tied Dausman with 15 kills in the two games, 10 coming against EKV.

Joining the pair of Lady Kats on the all-tournament teams were Louisville's Michelle Armbruster and Teresa Macklin, Deb Winkler of EKV and Morehead State's Dale Hamontree.

Eastern defeated Morehead in the consolation game Saturday, 15-9, 16-14, 15-10.

UK will put its national ranking and perfect 2-0 record on the line Friday. The Lady Kats play host to Eastern Michigan at 7:30 p.m. at the Coliseum.

A University of Louisville player goes for the spike against UK at the Kickoff Classic this weekend.

The 18th-ranked Kats won the two-day tournament, which marked the start of the 1987 season.

Before you choose a long distance service, take a close look.

You may be thinking about choosing one of the newer carriers over AT&T in order to save money.

Think again. Since January 1987, AT&T's rates have dropped more than 15% for direct-dialed out-of-state calls. So they're lower than you probably realize. For information on specific rates, you can call us at 1 800 222-0300.

And AT&T offers clear long distance connections, operator assistance, 24-hour customer service, and immediate credit for wrong numbers. Plus, you can use AT&T to call from anywhere to anywhere, all over the United States and to over 250 countries.

You might be surprised at how good a value AT&T really is. So before you choose a long distance company, pick up the phone.

Shiites release West German hostage

By LOUIS FARES
Associated Press

DAMASCUS, Syria — Shiite Moslem kidnapers in Lebanon freed one of their two West German hostages from seven months of captivity yesterday, and Iran and Syria played a role in the release, according to the Bonn government.

Syrian army officers drove 47-year-old engineer Alfred Schmidt to Damascus and turned him over to West German diplomats.

"It's wonderful to be a free man again," Schmidt said before he was taken to the airport for his flight home.

"They didn't mistreat me. The treatment was all right," he said. "I'm OK. I want to see my family and friends."

A West German air force transport plane had flown to Damascus to pick him up.

Schmidt was released at 4 a.m. in the slums of south Beirut, a stronghold of Iranian-backed Shiite militants. His captors, who call themselves the Holy Warriors for Freedom, indicated the agreement was worked out by Syria.

In Bonn, Foreign Ministry spokesman Jaergen Chrobag said, "Iran and Syria both helped win (Schmidt's) release. They both said they would help us and they did."

The kidnapers had demanded the release of two Lebanese Shiites, Mohammed Ali Hamadi and his brother, Ali Abbas Hamadi, from jail in West Germany. Officials in Bonn said there were no plans to free the Hamadis.

"There were never any negotiations to release the two Lebanese, and there are no plans to do so," said Alexander Prechtel, a spokesman for the federal prosecutor's office.

Spokesman Horst Siebert at Siemens, the huge electronics company that employs Schmidt, said, "No ransom was paid by Siemens."

Mohammed Ali Hamadi, 23, was arrested at Frankfurt airport Jan. 13 while carrying liquid explosives in wine bottles. The United States wants him on murder and other charges in the June 1985 hijacking of a TWA airliner to Beirut during which U.S. Navy diver Robert Ste- them was killed.

Joseph Biden of Delaware with 3 percent each.

Twenty-eight of the Democrats interviewed had no preference in the poll, which was conducted with 1,512 adult Americans last week. The margin of error was plus or minus 4 percentage points.

Super Tuesday weak minus conservative

Associated Press

LOUISVILLE — A Democratic candidate for president that appeals to Southern conservative voters is missing from the lineup for "Super Tuesday" March 8, according to some experts.

The governors and political consultants who attended the Southern Governors' Association meeting in Louisville last week generally agreed that "Super Tuesday" will be less than originally billed.

Fourteen states, including Kentucky, are part of the regional primary that the experts had thought might lure a conservative into the race for president.

Democratic candidates are concentrating their time in Iowa and New Hampshire, where the caucuses and primary, respectively, precede Super Tuesday.

Observers note that with Georgia Sen. Sam Nunn's decision to forgo the race, the Democrats lack anyone who could comfortably wear a Southern-conservative label.

But some of the Democratic governors who were interviewed during the Louisville meeting said they are taking the long view.

"We will warm up this time and see what happens," said Tennessee Gov. Ned McWherter, a former speaker of his state's House of Representatives who is backing Sen. Albert Gore of Tennessee for the Democratic presidential nomination.

McWherter, one of the original supporters of a regional primary, said the election will have an impact next year, which will make it more significant in the 1990s.

"By doing it, I think we have a better chance of getting where we need to be somewhere down the road than we would have had if we left it as it was," said Gov. Joe Frank Harris of Georgia, also a Democrat.

Harris said a problem, however, rests with the nominating process.

"It may not get there this time, but I think that, in retrospect, we'll be able to look back when it's all over and say Super Tuesday had a bigger impact than we anticipated it would have," he said.

Gov. Martha Layne Collins is a little more upbeat about Super Tuesday, which she believes is wide open.

Collins predicts candidates will pay attention to the South as never before, giving Southerners a chance to explore their views on education and economic development. "They'll listen to us," she said.

Alabama Gov. Harold Guy Hunt believes the southern states need some conservative viewpoints to make Super Tuesday work.

"It's certainly going to be the worst bear trap the Democrats ever set for themselves unless they entice more conservative and South-oriented candidates in," Hunt said.

"They don't have a single person in (the race) who can touch a majority of the Democratic voters in the state of Alabama," Hunt said.

Gov. Carroll A. Campbell Jr. of South Carolina said Republicans may end up as the beneficiaries because the Democrats won't have candidates with broad appeal in the South.

Republican governors Henry Bellmon of Oklahoma and James G. Martin of North Carolina agreed that over the years, the regional primary will have a moderating effect on Democratic candidates.

Consultants Harrison Hickman and Lance Tarrance told the governors at the Louisville meeting that the impact of next year's Super Tuesday will not match expectations.

Hickman, a Democrat from North Carolina based in Washington, said if the South really wants to have an impact, Super Tuesday should be at the end of the primary season.

Plan can't be altered in middle of game

The Council on Higher Education announced last Thursday that it was considering a mid-year tuition increase at state universities. The proposal, if adopted, would mean tuition would increase $10 next semester.

The proposal is in answer to a projected $8.8 million shortfall in the state's budget for higher education. The tuition-increase proposal would recover $1.1 million of the projected budget cuts.

The council's proposal is a lot like telling a football team at halftime that passing is no longer legal — from now on you have to kick the ball to move upfield.

It's not that an extra $10 next semester would be an extravagant amount to pay, although for some students it is, but it's more a matter of principle — or the lack of it.

The CHE, which sets tuition biennially, just got done raising tuition rates last year. In-state undergraduate students at UK now pay $706 a semester for tuition.

To change the tuition rate mid-way through the course of the year would be going back on a promise — a promise that shouldn't be taken lightly.

When students are told they are going to pay a certain tuition rate at the beginning of the year, that's exactly what they should pay throughout the course of the year.

There is no doubt that because of a projected $450 million state shortfall, education is left holding the bag because the state can't come up with its end of the funding. But that's true across the state in other areas beside education.

Furthermore, a mid-year increase would only act as a Band-Aid for a much larger problem. The extra funds would only bring in one-eighth of the money needed to make up for cuts, which makes a mid-year increase not even a viable short-term solution to an ever-increasing problem.

Just because the state isn't able to hold up its end of the bargain in funding higher education is no reason for the CHE to not honor its bargain with students.

Western paper's action irresponsible journalism

It seems the media is always quick to point its finger at organizations for withholding information from the public. This time, however, it appears the press has been the one concealing information.

In May, the state attorney general's office handed down an opinion to Western Kentucky University's student newspaper, the College Heights Herald, saying WKU Associated Student Government meetings do not fall under the Open Meetings Law.

The Herald requested the opinion after being asked to leave an ASG meeting earlier that month.

The only way ASG can be forced to open its meetings is if the organization that created it declares its meetings open. ASG was created by the WKU Board of Regents, so Herald editor, Carla Harris, said the paper will try to have a resolution declaring ASG meetings open read at Wednesday's board meeting.

After receiving the opinion, Harris said the paper never reported it. In fact, it never even told ASG about the decision, Harris said.

That's simply irresponsible journalism. Except when the nation's security may be at stake, the public has the right to know everything — the good, the bad and the ugly, even when it may harm the press.

That's one of the consequences of living in a free and open society.

The media's credibility is already dwindling after several questionable moves. The Herald's blunder hasn't helped it any.

Freedom's beauty being tarnished by those who bastardize its definition with 'real' intentions, confused explanations

"Freedom" is one of those words that means pretty much what the writer or the speaker or the rasical believes or says it means, which is what causes most of the problem.

I've just about decided there is little, if any, freedom anywhere on the face of the earth, and as far as that goes I tend to believe that freedom in heaven or hell will be well-managed by both the good and the bad forces, if you want to know the unvarnished truth about it.

I even read in The New York Times during the past week that the forces who staged the latest attempted coup in the Philippines did so because the general who led it said what they wanted was real freedom. That suggests, of course, that there is an unreal freedom, which sounds to me a great deal like what I'm talking about.

Therefore, it appears to me, that "real freedom" is just about as unreal as plain old "freedom," and to add another word to it is a waste of time.

The sad and tragic fact is that people (especially young people) are regularly asked to lay down their lives for the cause of freedom. It's amazing how relatively easy it is to enlist so many people, train them and send them out as freedom fighters.

In Nicaragua, the contras are the freedom fighters. Meantime, in Managua, the Sandinistas, who started out as freedom fighters against Somoza, are still guarding "freedom" throughout the nation, and Somoza went to his grave believing that all the time he was the freedom father figure.

Then there are the freedom fighters in Afghanistan. Naturally, they're engaged in mortal combat because they believe the Russians don't know the first thing about freedom, the same Russians who overthrew the czars because they sure-buddy didn't know diddle about freedom. And if the czars couldn't comprehend it, how in the world could an illiterate peasant in Afghanistan be expected to figure it out?

Which brings me to the Alamo.

I was in San Antonio this summer for another one of those educators' meetings (The Association for Education in Journalism and Mass Communications), and since I always try to work in a little private, unstructured, unguided, unbuttoned thing on my own, I spent a few hours strolling through the Alamo.

I had been there before, but I never grow tired of walking where the likes of Davy Crockett, William Travis, Jim Bowie and James Bonham lived the final moments of their courageous lives. I've never taken kindly to any theories that what they really were was a bunch of ragtag certified crazies.

They had plenty of chances to get out of that hell hole. As James Michener has described in his fine novel, "Texas," Bonham in particular seemed almost to be making a game out of seeing how many times he could break through enemy lines to go looking for help.

The 182 Texas freedom fighters (Michener's count includes 14 Kentuckians) had held out for days against as awesome a set of bad odds as one would ever dread. Yet the martyrs had all apparently been convinced that they'd rather die than surrender to General Santa Anna's idea concerning freedom.

Say what you will about Santa Anna (and there is certainly a great deal to be lamented about his reputation for killing, burning and pillaging), he was after all trying to hold on to his own nation.

He didn't think Crockett, Travis, Bowie, Bonham or any number of "freedom fighters" from Kentucky or Tennessee or anyplace else in the freedom-loving world deserved to be treated with an ounce of Southern hospitality, so long as what they really wanted to do was to take his land away from him and the government he represented.

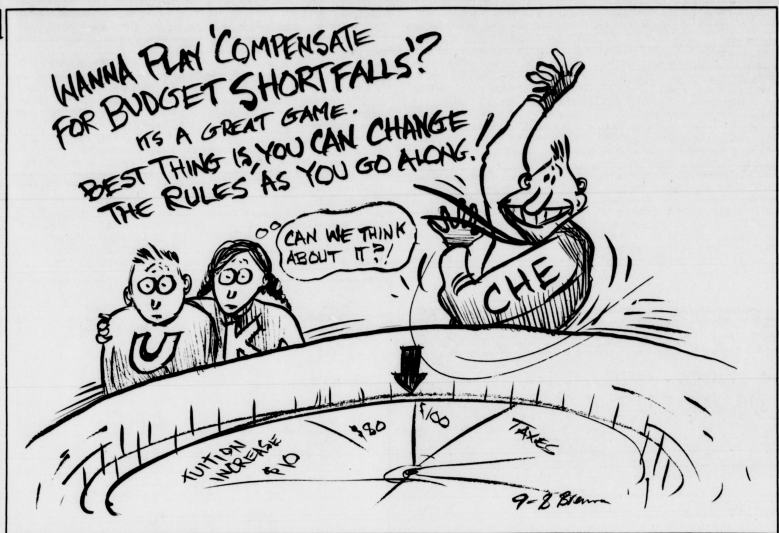

Shouldn't we be a lot more honest with ourselves and the people with whom we're trying to communicate — on the subject of freedom, or anything else for that matter?

Maybe it would do wonders for our credibility if we weren't quite so pious about our own freedom declarations. Things such as "Western Expansion" and "Manifest Destiny" are rather poor substitutes for "Imperialism" and "Death to the Savages."

I suppose what I'm trying so hard to say is that freedom is a beautiful word, which shouldn't be cheapened or bastardized or confused with real-world intentions.

Escape

Afternoon hike temporarily erases life's pressing matters

After these first couple weeks of cranking out issues of the Kernel, I was about ready to demote myself to contributing writer, stick my head in a pitcher of beer and have Tom Sullivan cut it off with an axe.

I mean I love writing and I love the people and I love being editor. But the last-minute pressures of trying to fill above-average length papers with stories and staff writers we don't have yet, (while personally writing articles and columns and copyediting six hours a day and dealing with potential writers and attending meetings and luncheons.) was starting to get to me.

Especially since we haven't exactly been hitting deadline and the printers are about ready to lower the boom.

Like I said, the pitcher was full, the axe was sharp and Tom was putting on his hood.

I had to get out of here.

Then, like it sometimes happens when you're frustrated and desperate and the corner you're backed into has a stranglehold on your senses, the phone rang long-distance salvation.

My girlfriend didn't have to work and she wanted to go hiking.

The drive to Berea and the first mile of the hike up to the pinnacles was post-card material, and though my neck muscles were still tight and my eyes were still squinting, I started to relax.

There's something calming about nature. I like to hear insects buzz, smell dead leaves and see squirrels scamper through the branches of trees that have been here before I was a thought.

As we got deeper into the woods, the canopy of trees got thicker and the grade got steeper. With every breath, I felt myself exhaling hours of reading news copy and staying up late to do homework.

Every step took me that much farther away from what I was trying to forget — at least for a day.

The trail was relatively easy, but we left it frequently to climb rock faces, check out interesting plants and trees, and examine the traces of animals. Often we found tracks in soft mud, rubs on trees and chewed walnut and hickory husks.

The climb took less than an hour, but that hour was filled with a multitude of sights, sounds and smells, none of which prepared me for the view at the top.

It's clichéd to call it breathtaking, but I confess I almost did forget to breathe as I looked out on the lakes and barns no-telling-how-many-feet below. I'm also clichéd to say a hawk was flying in the sky around us, but vultures were riding the currents of air not far from where we stood. I felt suddenly envious of how graceful they moved, unlike my somewhat uncoordinated hopping from boulder to boulder.

I felt like an ant climbing in a bucket of gravel as I climbed down, under and in-between the massive boulders that seemed cautiously balanced on the edge of the pinnacles. Cyndi and I took turns taking pictures of each other perching on the edge of the cliffs.

We ate lunch on a table formed by a rock bench, watching a lizard scurry in the dust and climb down the pinnacle via a plant elevator. And we sat in the warm sun, forgetting the worries of classes, bills and for me, the Kernel.

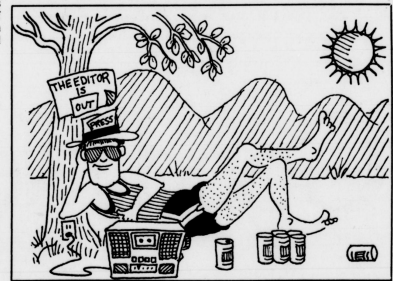

When you're on a ledge some thousands of feet in the air, surrounded only by trees, a few birds and the warm smell of fading summer, books and copy editing mistakes no longer seem important.

Some people say that every time you leave a beautiful sight, you leave behind part of your soul. I left part of my soul on those pinnacles, but more importantly, I left behind hours of worry, feelings of frustration and tense muscles.

Everybody has an out, an escape hatch, a place to retreat to and recover from the stress of jobs, homework and relationships. For some people, it's a book, for some a bar, for others a run in the park.

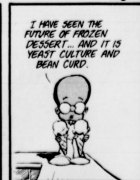

For me, there's nothing like a canoe trip, a hike or a sleeping bag under the stars to erase the bad tastes of civilization.

Outlook on Central America not bright, Reagan aides say

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A consensus has formed in the Reagan administration that the 6-year-old U.S. struggle against Nicaragua's leftist government will be lost by the end of the year unless present trends are reversed, officials say.

According to a number of Central American experts in the administration, a sense of alarm exists, based on the perception that the regional peace agreement signed last month heavily favors the Sandinista government.

"All they (the Sandinistas) have to do is wait until December," said one official, speaking on condition he not be identified. Said another, who also insisted on anonymity, "Time is on the Sandinistas' side."

Leading Democrats are more optimistic. House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, for example, contends that the Sandinistas have made an impressive start toward complying with the terms of the agreement requiring democratic reform.

In addition to democratization, the agreement calls for a cutoff of U.S. aid to the rebel movement.

One administration official said the administration is working on "new ideas" to head off what they see as a potential major strategic defeat for the United States. President Reagan has said the contras will not be abandoned. But he has not specified how that goal will be accomplished.

The current U.S. aid allocation to the contras expires Sept. 30. The Sandinistas are not required under the agreement to show a good faith effort to democratize until Nov. 7.

The officials believe the Sandinistas need only maintain a democratic facade until late fall to achieve final victory.

As the officials see it, the mood in Congress is such that virtually any token democratic gesture by the Sandinistas will be seized on by the Democrat-controlled Congress and guarantee defeat of any contra-aid request.

Once the contras realize they cannot get any more aid from Washington, democratization will set in and the rebels will be forced to disband, these officials believe.

The officials predicted that the Sandinistas will dismantle the democratic trappings now in place, once the contra threat is removed and will establish a Cuban-style system and resume efforts to subvert their neighbors.

Wright and Reagan drew up a peace plan last month that essentially was superseded by the agreement signed by Central America's leaders in Guatemala on Aug. 7. Wright has spoken enthusiastically about the Guatemala plan, and his views carry substantial weight among his fellow House Democrats.

The speaker told the Los Angeles Times last week that he was impressed with some of the steps Nicaragua has taken over the past month — including appointment of a National Reconciliation Commission — to comply with the Guatemala agreement.

"The fact that they've done these things ought to be applauded," Wright said, criticizing uncomplimentary remarks by the State Department about the makeup of the commission.

DR. BOP & THE HEADLINERS: WORLD'S GREATEST PARTY

Who is Dr. Bop?

If you make sense of the following, then you deserve a late model Studdebaker—a bright pink one strung with oversized fuzzy green dice. And, you begin to get an idea about Dr. Bop and his wild, theatrical, crazy band of "struck-in-the-60's" baby boomers called the "Headliners."

The dapper, elastic faced man in his 30's goes by the name of Ferret de Monte Cristo. That's pronounced "Fair-ay" and he leans like a mock french lecher when he leaps across the stage with guitar, saxophone, or beer pitcher. He gets the suds on stage from a Mr. Winston Foynelet. Besides dispensing suds from the zebra skinned "Celebrity Bar" on stage, Poyvnetta's other main task is to let women ride on his back during Dr. Bop and the Headliners' "Incredible Human Surfboard" routine.

Huge beach umbrellas are planted at either end of the stage and between them cavort ghosts from American Bandstand—barbie doll songbirds who may have double dated with the LEADER OF THE PACK. They go by the names of Mimi and Lola Valendez, "Classic Caribbean Beauties from the Port of Spain, Trinidad". They boop-boop, coo, bop, dance, sing, and otherwise harmonize with the rest of these middle-aged teenagers, hamming it up with a fury, and cranking out oldies with musical virtuosity.

The audience is a spectacle unto itself. Stray "togas" here and there who are admitted free for "atmosphere" mingle with yuppies, singles out for a fun howl, college students, as well as the dressed up parents whose tastes date back to Elvis' prime. Dr. Bop groups are here too—a cult that follows him from city to city and purportedly lives in 57 Nomad Chevy Wagons. After all these years most everyone knows the handful of short words that go with "Louie-Louie" and "Surfin' USA" and Dr. Bop frequently turns the mike to an audience that sings in unison.

Dr. Bop likes to start the show fast and jumps quickly to warp speed—the lead guitarist enters stage right, does two forward flips with guitar in hand, lands erect and, without missing a chord, catches a full pitcher of beer in the face from Mimi and Lola. Dr. Bop's contract requires three fifths of liquor, two gallons of wine, and a keg of beer on stage—Mimi and Lola celebrate by cracking open a fifth of liquor and guzzle straight from the bottle.

With dark glasses and beard stubble, band father, Dr. Bop, looks like a mole that's fallen on hard times. Only Dr. Bop himself, behind his ruby red drum kit and under his own beach umbrella stays rooted to one spot and to one instrument. From this position the good doctor, "America's Newest Legendary Entertainer" keeps the beat for the Headliners while they move from authentic Buddy Holly, drivin' punk, field Frankie Lynton, machine-head synchronized motown tunes, to the classic sound of the Beach Boys and the Beatles.

Of course, music alone is not enough so band members suit themselves in a Haley's Comet selection of threads and deliver between-song jokes that Milton Berle wouldn't touch with a hot poker. The male members go in heavily for physical acrobatics and beer fights. You dance near the stage in imminent danger of beer "over-spray". The big factor here is individual personality and each band member possesses plenty of it.

The scene repeats itself in first class nightclubs and ballrooms across America. Dr. Bop's unique prescription is a large dose of fun, laughter, and the world's greatest party. Don't be misled—Dr. Bop is serious about being unserious. Dr. Bop's famous happy hour is required by contract and each performance is backed by Dr. Bop's money back guarantee - if you don't have a great time your cover charge is refunded. With a long list of corporate clients, special performances before the Prince of Wales, H.B.O. and a shared stage with Bob Seger, Ringo Starr, Elton John, and Chubby Checker this doctor doesn't worry about malpractice.

A final caveat. The show is not recommended for the faint of heart and persons should plan to be late for work the next day. Pre-party conditioning is a must-it helps to practice the twist and other dance steps that require well oiled hips. Prepare yourself mentally be steady to bop till you drop!

Dr. Bop will appear in Lexington Wednesday, September 9th, at RHINESTONES MUSIC PALACE. Dr. Bop's famous Happy Hour is from 7:00-9:00. The show runs from 9:30 to 12 mid. General Admission is $5.00 and anyone wearing a toga is admitted free. Very casual dress. 1-75 at Richmond Rd., Lexington 40505
